PREFACE.

AN examination of the Collection of Greek Coins, briefly described in the following pages, will at once convince the observer that its formation has been the work of one combining, in himself, the qualities of a scholar, an enthusiastic numismatist, and an ardent admirer of classical art. Such a one indeed was the late FRANK SHERMAN BENSON, and aided by an excellent classical knowledge, and a natural and critical appreciation of the beautiful in art, he succeeded in gathering together a series of Greek Coins, which has seldom been excelled in quality, and which certainly forms the most important private collection ever made in the United States of America.

The collection is well-known in New York, Mr. F. Sherman Benson having used it to illustrate many learned and exceptionally useful addresses to the members of the American Numismatic Society, and in the summer months, during his absence from the city, it had been placed on public exhibition at the University there. It was his desire that the collection should, in its entirety, find a permanent resting-place in some public institution in America devoted to classical and artistic training: this desire it has been found impossible to realise, and, in consequence, it will now be dispersed by public auction.

It will be found that the collection is principally concerned with the numismatic history of ancient Italy and Sicily. It was to these series that Mr. F. Sherman Benson first turned his attention, and to the end he was probably more keenly interested in them than in the coinages of Hellas and of Asia. It was only of recent years that he commenced the study of the deeper and more virile productions of these latter countries—a study unfortunately interrupted by his sudden death.

To these preliminary remarks it is necessary to add a few notes concerning the coins themselves. It will be found that the series of coins of Apulia, Calabria and Lucania, are amply represented by admirable specimens—often of exceptional beauty and preservation, and mostly coming from well-known collections. An idea of the thoroughness with which Mr. Sherman Benson pursued his collecting is to be gathered by an inspection of the many beautiful coins of Terina; possibly no such series as this has ever before been seen in a single sale. Of Sicily the series is remarkably rich in fine specimens: attention should be drawn to the beautiful pieces of Akragas, with two eagles and the figure of Seylla (nos. 176-178), the Eryx with figure of Aphrodite (181), the coins of Himera, Camarina and Catana (amongst the latter of which are three wonderfully fine pieces, nos. 208, 209, 211), and to the many fine pieces of Messina, Motya, Naxos, Selinus and Segesta. The magnificent series of Syracuse is one which, in itself, almost completely illustrates the rise and fall of Greek art in Sicily. The early coins of the Gamori, those following of Gelon and his wife Demarete, and of Hieron, will be found illustrated by many varied examples: the glorious period of Dionysios is admirably represented by the many signed works of celebrated artists; and the later sections by such fine coins as are shown on Plates XIII and XIV.

Of the coins of Greece proper, attention must be directed to the altogether exceptional pieces of Acanthus, Amphipolis, Chalcidice, Dieaea, Aenus, Delphi, Thebes, Elis and Arcadia. The highly interesting coinage of Crete is notably well represented: in the matter of beauty by the fine coins of Chersonesus, Gortyna, Cnossus, Phaestus, Priansos and Sybritia: in that of mythology by many specimens that record the fabulous histories of the Minotaur, Europa, Kydon and other local deities and heroes.

The larger field of Asia Minor to Syria will be found well illustrated—in many cases by coins well worthy of special notice here—and the catalogue finishes with the description of the coins of the Cyrenaica and that mighty city Carthage.

The collection is very fairly explained by the numerous plates appended, but it should be borne in mind that these in no way exhaust the number of beautiful and interesting coins contained in the collection.

* * The attribution of this very early anepigraphic Stater to the small island of Anaphe is somewhat uncertain; that it belongs to the group of early island coins seems unquestionable, and the appearance of a similar vase, as a reverse type, on the later coins of Anaphe makes its attribution to this island at least probable.

* * That these two coins—Nos. 625 and 626—belong to the same minting place is most improbable; though of the same standard and, practically, of the same period, they are completely different in both style and method of production. The first coin probably belongs to the Asiatic mainland, the second (often tentatively attributed to Argos) may very well belong to Delos.
