PREFACE.

THE Collection of Coins now offered for sale was made with the purpose of illustrating the development of Greek life, whether political, social or artistic. With that aim in view the Collection was not confined to coins of artistic beauty and rarity, but included series such as the copper coins of Sicily, often historically of great importance, and an attempt was made to arrange them on a system somewhat different from that usually adopted—a system which has been followed in this Catalogue.

The traditional method of describing Greek coins according to geographical divisions, many of which did not come into existence till long after the coins themselves—a method which goes back to Eckhel's great work—has certain advantages of simplicity and custom, but is not founded on any scientific principle and does not exhibit the growth and development of the coinage. It groups together coins which have little relation to one another and separates those which are closely connected. A less artificial arrangement will be more difficult to work out, it must necessarily have many imperfections, it can never be entirely symmetrical, but it will greatly increase the historical value and interest of a collection or a catalogue.

Such an arrangement would start with the electrum coinage of Asia, and would trace the progress of coinage across the Ægean to the mainland of Greece, where the tortoises of Ægina would head the series. It would pass north to Macedonia and Thrace, west to Sicily and Magna Græcia, south to Cyrene. Later would come the new departure under Alexander and the Diadochi, and later still the coins struck under Roman influence.

In this Catalogue only the beginnings of such an arrangement are attempted, but its advantages may be illustrated from the coinage of Sicily, where the arrangement is based on Holm's "Geschichte Siciliens." For example, there is much utility in exhibiting together the coinage struck by Gelon in the three allied cities of Syracuse, Gela, and Leontini; in showing the gradual development of Sicilian art through the transition period; in grouping the coins of all the Sicilian cities (often the work of the same artists) during the brilliant period at the close of the fifth century, or the interesting bronze series with the free horse recording the expeditions of Timoleon, and then at the end the debased coinage struck under the Romans.

It had been hoped that at any rate this section of the collection might be kept together to form the nucleus of a more complete collection based on the same principles.

So in the case of Magna Græcia it is of great advantage that the very singular early coinage which has been connected with the Pythagorean League should be exhibited together. Then comes, as in Sicily, the growth of artistic power, and the beautiful coinage of the period of finest art; and then the development of the coinage of the semi-barbarous Italian cities leading to that of republican Rome. Rome appears to the numismatist as a half barbarous Italian city gradually acquiring civilisation under Greek influence.

The collection was not complete enough to allow the same system to be worked out elsewhere, but there is a considerable advantage in having the early electrum and gold coinages grouped together as in Dr. Percy Gardner's interesting paper; and the coinage of the Macedonian kings and the Diadochi forms a class by itself, as do the barbarous imitations. In a larger collection the same principles might be worked out more fully in a very interesting manner.

It is hoped that the change thus made in arrangement will add to the interest both of the collection and the catalogue.
