NUMISMATIC COMMENTARY ON PAUSANIAS.

I.

Book I. 39-44.—Megarica.

Book II.—Corinthiaca.

The following paper is the first of a series of two or three which will bring into contact the extant coins of Greece and the text of Pausanias, thus furnishing to many passages of the traveller's writings a running numismatic commentary.

The main object we have set before us is to collect and set forth the numismatic reproductions of works of art mentioned by Pausanias; but we have not excluded any numismatic types which at all illustrate the cults and the legends mentioned by him as existing in the various cities of Peloponnesus.

The importance of the work cannot be doubted when we consider that in the case of many of the statues mentioned by Pausanias the only copies known are those upon coins; we may therefore hope to reconstruct from numismatic evidence, at least the general schemes of many great works of art wholly lost, and thus furnish very important material for recovering the history of Greek art; especially the history of the succession of types of the chief deities of Greece, which is a subject of great and increasing interest to archaeologists.

Generally speaking, the coins on which we can place the most reliance as sources of information as to the monuments are those of Hadrian and the Antonines. These coins are also the best in point of execution; and we may add that they are contemporary with the travels of Pausanias.
To discern whether the types of Greek coins of the Imperial class, with which chiefly we shall have to do, are merely conventional representations of deities, or whether on the other hand they are copies of statues, is not an easy task. But a few rules may be laid down which may be safely used in judging of this matter.

There is reason to suppose that the figure of a deity on a coin is a copy of a cultus-statue in the following cases:

1. When it is represented within a temple or shrine. This is the surest of all indications of an intention to copy; and few or no instances will be found in which on coins a merely conventional figure of a deity is placed in a temple. Of course we cannot trust the small and careless representations on coins for accuracy in such details as the number of pillars in a temple, or the design of the pediment; and even in representing the cultus-statue, a die-sinker might take strange liberties. But it seems that in every case he meant to copy so far as his ability and memory served.

2. When the figure stands on a pedestal, the intention is obviously to represent a statue. By parity of reasoning, when the figure on the coins leans on a pillar, or otherwise is of a design fitted for the round but not for reliefs, it is probably inspired by a statue.

3. The presence of an altar on a coin is also an indication, although a less trustworthy indication, of the intention to portray a cultus-statue.

4. So is also any indication of locality, such as a river-god or acropolis-rock. But of course such proofs as these must not be seriously relied on.

5. When an identical type recurs unchanged on the coins of a series of emperors stretching over a long period, then there arises a presumption that such uniformity is caused by the existence of a sculptural original, constantly under the eyes of successive die-sinkers. They may in some cases have copied the coins one of another, but this is less likely.

6. Sometimes the language used by Pausanias enables us to determine the connexion of a statue and a coin-type. For instance, he may describe the statue in detail and the description may apply to the coin-type; or he may state the age and the author of the statue, and these may completely suit the figure of the coin.

(7) In some cases, especially where archaic types are concerned, the figure on the coin may bear sufficient internal evidence of being copied from a statue, and we may in some cases be able to identify that statue from information otherwise gained.

The only previous writer who must be acknowledged as our predecessor is Panofka, who published in 1853-5, Archaeological Commentaries on certain portions of Pausanias, more especially II. 24, which describes the citadel of Argos. Of course the material at our disposal is far more abundant than that which he could command.

A word must be said as to the share taken in this paper by the two compilers. They began the task independently; for the present article it was found advisable to use the numismatic lists of the Swiss colleague, which were more complete, as a basis: he has also furnished the casts used for illustration in the case of all coins not in England or Paris. The English colleague has added some material and put the article into final form, and is responsible for the comments added after the lists of coins.¹

NUMISMATIC COMMENTARY ON PAUSANIAS.

MEGARA.

1.—Paus. I. 40, 2. Τῆς δὲ κρῆνης οὐ πόρρω ταύτης ἀρχαίον ἐστιν ἱερόν . . . καὶ ἀγαλμά τε κεῖται χαλκοῦν Ἀρτέμιδος ἐπικλήσιον Σωτείρας . . . τὴν δὲ Ἀρτεμίν αὐτήν Στρογγυλίων ἐποίησε. Cf. 44, 2, statue of Artemis in temple of Apollo.

ARTEMIS running to the right in short chiton; holds torch in each hand.

This type of Artemis recurs on coins of Pagae in exactly similar form. It is, as we shall show in treating of that city (infra) undoubtedly a copy of the work of Strongylion.

The head of Eucleides of Megara is very peculiar. The philosopher, though bearded, wears the veil and the earring of a woman. It has been suggested by Visconti that this is obviously in allusion to the tale told about Eucleides, that he came disguised as a woman, and veiled, from Megara, to attend the lectures of Plato, at a time when access to Athens was forbidden to the Megarians under pain of death. See Aulus Gellius, Noct. Att. vi. 10.

2.—Paus. I. 41, 3. Οὐ πόρρῳ δὲ τοῦ "Τῆλου μνήματος . . . ναός . . . Ἀπόλλωνος ἐστὶ καὶ Ἀρτέμιδος. . . . Ἀλκάθουν τὸν Πέλοπος . . . τὸ ἱερὸν ποιῆσαι τοῦτο Ἀγροτέραν Ἀρτεμίν καὶ Ἀπόλλωνα Ἀγραῖον ἐπονομάσαντα.

3.—Paus. I. 40, 4. Ἐς τὸ τοῦ Δίως τέμενος ἐσελθοῦσι καλούμενον Ὀλυμπιεῖον ναός ἐστι θέας ἀξίου . . . τῷ δὲ ἀγάλματι τοῦ Δίως πρόσωπον ἑλέφαντος καὶ χρυσοῦ, τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ πηλοῦ τέ ἐστι καὶ γύνον ποιήσαι δὲ αὐτῷ Θεόκοσμον λέγουσιν ἐπιχώριον, συνεργάσασθαι δὲ οἱ θεοί Φειδίας.

ZEUS seated on throne, holds Victory.

Zeus seated, holds eagle.

The figure on the coins is the usual conventional representation of a seated Zeus by Pheidias, such as that found on the coins of Elis, of Alexander the Great, &c. It is curious that the Zeus on the coins bears sometimes a Victory and sometimes an eagle. The statues doubtless held a Victory, and it was the natural instinct of Greek art in the good period, in engraving so small a thing as a coin die, to substitute for the Victory a simpler device of the same meaning, such as an eagle, the bird of victory. Accordingly on Alexander's own coins, the Olympian Zeus invariably carries an eagle; on the coins of his successors, a figure of Victory is sometimes substituted.

4.—Cf. Paus. i. 43, 6. Ὅν τῷ νάρῳ τῷ πλησίων Μούσας καί χαλκοῦν Δία ἐπόησε Ἀὕσιπτος. Cf. 40, 6, Διὸς Κονίου ναὸς οὐκ ἔχων ὃροφον.

These figures are of quite conventional type; and as they do not appear in a temple there is no strong reason to suppose that they repeat the statues of Bryaxis. But at the same time there is nothing at all improbable in such a view. Mr. Wroth, who has made a most careful study of the artistic representations of Asklepios and Hygieia, states his opinion (Journ. Hell. Stud. v. p. 90) that the customary late schemes of the pair came into existence about the time of Scopas, and were possibly due to that artist. But the only figure of Asklepios by Scopas, of the details of which we know anything, was beardless (Overbeck, G. P. II. 11): so that perhaps the claims of Bryaxis to the origination of the usual type are preferable to his, in the existing state of knowledge.

7.—Paus. i. 44, 2. "Εστι δὲ ἐν τῷ γυμνασίῳ τῷ ἀρχαίῳ πλησίον πυλῶν καλουμένων Νυμφάδων λίθος παρεχόμενος πυ- ραμίδος σχῆμα οὗ μεγάλης τοῦτον Ἀπόλλωνα ὀνομά- ξουσι Καρινόν.

8.—Paus. i. 42, 5. Τοῦ δὲ Ἀπόλλωνος πλήθου μὲν ἢ ἢ ἀρχαῖος ναὸς· ὑστερον δὲ βασιλεὺς ἀφοδόμησεν Ἀδριανὸς λίθον λευκοῦ· οὗ μὲν δὴ Πύθιος καλούμενος καὶ ὁ Δεκατηφόρος τοῖς Ἀιγυπτίους μάλιστα εὐκάσιοι ξύλοις, ἰον δὲ Ἀρχηγέτῃν ἐπονομάζον πειρακτικοῖς ἑργοῖς ἐστιν ὄμοιος. APOLLO ARTEMIS and LETO.

We have here a most important type, which should be a copy more or less free of the statues of Praxiteles. It merits a detailed description. To the left is Leto clad in long chiton in her raised right hand she holds a long sceptre, her left hand hangs by her side. In the midst stands Apollo in citharoedic dress, holding in his right hand a plectrum, and in his left a lyre. To the right stands Artemis clad in long chiton with diplois, holding in her left hand a plectrum, and with her right drawing an arrow from the quiver at her back. None of these schemes are in conflict with the style of Praxiteles.

ATHENE erect, spear in raised right hand, shield on left arm.

DEMETER standing veiled clad in chiton with diplois, holds in either hand a torch; before her, large torch fixed in the ground.

TYCHE wearing mural crown, holds patera and cornucopiae.
Damophon of Messene set the fashion, so greatly followed in later times, of setting up cultus-statues of the goddess. In all probability the normal type, as represented on our coin, was the invention of one of them. The altar beside Tyche on the coin is an indication of locality which tells in favour of the view that we have to do with a copy of a statue.

This figure of Artemis was (cf. Paus. i. 40, 2) a replica of that made by Strongylion, the contemporary of Pheidias, for the people of Megara. The coins of Megara and Pagae present us with figures of Artemis exactly alike. At Pagae this figure appears in a temple and on a basis. There can therefore be no doubt that it reproduces Strongylion's statue. This has been already stated by Streber, and accepted in Müller-Wieseler, Denkmäler, II. 174 b. Pausanias gives (l.c.) an account of the tale which led to the erection of the statue, in which Artemis seems to be embodied as the goddess of night, and is assimilated to the Thessalian Hecate, who also is represented on coins of Pherae of the fourth and third centuries as bearing two torches.

Æ Sept. Sev. B. M. (A I.)

The tree entwined by a serpent is a regular symbol of the grave, and this is sufficient proof that the building represented on the coin of Geta must be a well-known tomb; but as to details we have no information.

I am not aware that there is any record of the existence of a tradition that Melampus was suckled by a she-goat: but nothing is more likely. Such stories were told of highly-gifted men, and it is fairly certain that the type of the coin must refer to a noted native of Aegosthena, and so to Melampus, who was its only remarkable man.

Corinth.

In criticising the types which we meet on the coins of Corinth we must always bear in mind the words of Pausanias:

(Π. 2, 6.) Δύνας δὲ ἀξία ἐν τῇ πόλει τὰ μὲν λευτόμενα ἐστὶ τῶν ἁρχαῖων ἔστιν, τὰ δὲ πολλὰ αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῆς ἀκμῆς ἐποιήθη τῆς ύστερον.

It will seem unlikely that a sack, like that of Corinth in B.C 146, would spare any works of art existing in the city. Yet it appears, alike from the general statement of Pausanias just quoted, and from the remarks which he makes as to various temples and statues, that there were in Roman Corinth a great number of works of early Greek art. Of these some may have been brought into Roman Corinth from neighbourning towns; but others are in character so local that we can scarcely doubt that they belonged to the early city, whatever theory we may form as to the manner of their survival.

The Roman colonists, entering on a wealth of Greek art and legend, adopted both with enthusiasm, and were very proud of both. There is no other Greek city whereof the coins give us so extensive information on the subject of temples and statues, legends and cults. The imperial series of Corinth furnishes a very full archaeological commentary on the text of Pausanias: indeed the correspondences between the two are so many and so close, that it seems rather the rule than the exception for coin-types to be copies of works of art, more especially works of early Greek art.

It is evident from Pausanias' statements, confronted with the coins, that the one among the many stories as to the history of Ino and Melicertes or Palaemon which was accepted at Corinth was that which represented that Ino and Melicertes leaped into the sea at Megara, and Palaemon was borne by a dolphin to the part of the Isthmus where was the sanctuary of Poseidon; that he there died and was buried, and after death was worshipped as a hero, and honoured by funeral games.

It is not easy to reconcile this tale, and the peculiar artistic representation of Melicertes as a young boy which prevailed at Corinth, with the view of those who suppose Melicertes to be a form of the Tyrian god Melkarth. But this matters little to the present purpose, for it is certain that the Corinthians knew nothing of the proposed identification.

On coins there are three schemes of Palaemon and the dolphin: sometimes he is sitting on it, sometimes standing, sometimes lying; the standing figure certainly belongs to the group of gold and ivory set up by Herodes Atticus in the temple of Poseidon; the lying figure is connected with the pine-tree and the altar under it, as well as with the round temple of Palaemon; the seated figure may perhaps be copied from the statue mentioned by Pausanias lower down (II. 3, 4). But of course such distinctions are too nice to be strongly insisted on.

Figures of Ino and Melicertes, as of Poseidon and other types of Corinthian coins are to be found on the splendid cameo of Vienna (Overbeck, Kunstmyth. III., Gemmentafel II. 8), which presents us with an abridged picture of the region.

2.—Paus. II. 1, 9. 'Ανάκειται Γαλήνης ἀγαλμα καὶ Θαλάσσης, καὶ ἵππος εἰκασμένος κητεί τα μετὰ το στέρνον, Ἰνώ τε καὶ Βελλεροφόντης καὶ ὁ ἵππος ὁ Πήγασος.

The presence of the hippocamp suggests that the type first described, which represents Ino without her child, may represent one of the anathemata of the temple of Poseidon, there set up in Roman times.

The second type, which appears full-face, represents Ino as holding her child on her left arm, and grasping with her right hand the end of her veil. In the third type she is in rapid motion towards the sea, which is represented on one coin by a marine deity, on others by a dolphin. Sometimes, however, the locality is changed, and in the place of the sea appears a seated figure of Isthmus. As this figure of Ino persists unchanged from the time of Domitian to that of Septimius Severus, it would seem to be based on some work of art.

The presence of Artemis, and the use in some cases of a column to support the group of Bellerophon and the Chimaera, alike indicate that it is copied from the sculptured group of the fountain. The water would flow from one of the forefeet of Pegasus.

See also above, (B iv.) and (B x.)

The coin which represents Isthmus as seated within a temple (C xxxvii.) repeats a Corinthian cultus-statue. No doubt Isthmus was personified as a local hero; and tradition must, as the coins show, have connected him with the history of Ino and Melicertes. In his temple he was represented as a young and naked man, seated on a rock, resting his right hand on his head, and supporting himself on his rudder, in an attitude of complete repose. His face is turned backwards, implying probably that Isthmus faced both the eastern and the western sea. Compare a very similar figure of Haemus on the coins of Nicopolis.

If the standing figure of the coins represents a work of art, it might well be a bronze statue erected in the neighbourhood of the Isthmian temple; such a statue is not mentioned by Pausanias. The two rudders in the hands clearly refer to the two harbours which existed, one on each side of the isthmus.

The details of architecture are among the matters as to which the representations of coins are least trustworthy. But in this particular case there is an obvious intention to represent the temple of Poseidon as faithfully as space would allow. The tree in front of the temple and the Tritons over the angles of the pediment are certainly taken from the Poseidium. We may therefore venture to accept the numismatic testimony that the little temple of Poseidon was not peripteral but either prostyle or amphiprostyle; and we may even regard it as probable that the temple was tetrastyle.

These figures in chariots may be confronted with Pausanias' description, ii. 1, 7 above quoted, of the group of Poseidon and Amphitrite in a chariot drawn by four horses. The coins cannot, however, embody a reminiscence of the group, as the date of Herodes is later than that at which they were struck.

Of the various figures of Poseidon thus far mentioned the only one which can be regarded as a copy of a statue is that which figures Poseidon as seated (D LIV.—VI.), holding dolphin and trident. This type has the air of the cultus-statue of a temple; but we cannot be sure of the particular temple, for on one coin the seated Poseidon is confronted with an athlete which seems to point to the Isthmus, in another with Pallas, which seems to indicate the market-place. (See below.)

Views of harbour of CENCHREAE, flanked on either side by temple, and containing standing colossus of Poseidon and three ships.

The coin of Millingen (D LX.) is important, as it enables us to identify positively the type of Poseidon represented in the bronze statue of the mole. Poseidon stood erect and naked with a dolphin in one hand and a trident in the other, a figure well adapted for execution in bronze and for a statue of great size. The date of its erection must have been subsequent to the colony of Caesar; had it belonged to the old city Mummius would scarcely have spared such a mass of metal. In case of the B. M. coin (D LXII), the second dolphin at the feet of the god may be held to stand for the water of the harbour which flowed at his feet.

The head of Aphrodite on the last coin cited must stand for an abbreviated representation of the temple dedicated to her.

Æ Commodus. Imh. (D LXIX.)

The hunting Artemis in D LXVIII. must be a copy of a statue in her temple; not the archaic xoanon, but a later figure such as the Greeks from the fifth century onwards commonly set up in the cella in place of the early statues, still retaining the latter in the background.

The figure in D LXIX. would seem to be a copy of the statue which stood in the baths of Eurycles near a statue of Poseidon, and in the neighbourhood of his temple. On the coin the figure of Poseidon is nearly obliterated: it is not indeed certain that Poseidon is the deity represented: the figure seems to wear a long chiton.

This identification of the tomb of Λαῖς the Elder has long been accepted, and is so certain as to be beyond dispute. On a B. M. specimen not here figured Leake read on the capital of the column the letters ΕΥ... which he supposes to be an artist's name (Leake, Supp. Europe, p. 121). I am inclined to think that the appearance of letters is fallacious, and due merely to the oxidation of the coin. But if we accept Leake's reading it is likely that the word beginning Eu is not an artist's name, for artists did not put their names in so conspicuous a position on monuments, but some heroic name by which Λαῖς may have been, so to speak, canonised after her death. The name ΕΥΦΡΟΣΥΝΑ would suit the space very well, and there is certainly at the end an appearance of the letters... ΝΑ, as well as of ΕΥ... at the beginning.

The head on the obverse of the coin may be intended either for Aphrodite or for Λαῖς herself.

The coin first described, that of the St. Florian Collection, is unfortunately ill-preserved, and Dr. Kenner expresses doubts as to the deity whom it is intended to represent. Arneth has described it as Abundantia holding cornucopiae and patera; and this is the impression conveyed by the engraving in Kenner's book. If so, the figure must certainly be a copy of the statue of Tyche in her temple. In consequence of the condition of the coin we cannot be sure as to the attributes given to Tyche; they may even be rudder and patera or cornucopiae, as in the succeeding specimens.

The coin of Antoninus (E LXXXVII.) seems to represent a statue, since the scheme of a figure resting on the trunk of a tree as a support is more appropriate to sculpture than to die-sinking.
This figure is remarkable in being entirely nude.
The type of the first coin, (E LXXXVI.), is closely like the seated Hermes, of which we shall speak below; indeed, so like that both would seem to be work of one artist or one school, probably of Imperial times.

The altar placed before the figure of Pallas, who holds Victory and spear, seems to show that this figure is a copy of a statue.
This same figure in slightly varied form (patera for Victory) is placed on the coin of Commodus in near proximity to Poseidon, which may indicate for the original a locality near the Isthmus, rather than in the agora.

It would seem probable from comparison of the coins that the temple described by Pausanias as that of Octavia was really of the Gens Julia. The seated lady holding sceptre and patera may be copied from the statue in this temple. In details it exactly resembles the figure on the coins of Tiberius commonly called Livia, but more probably really standing for a personification of the Gens Julia. Such a personification would naturally take the features of one of the imperial ladies, Livia or Julia or Octavia. If in the Corinthian temple the cultus-statue represented the Gens Julia in the likeness of Octavia, then it would be very natural for any visitor to suppose that the temple was dedicated to Octavia.

It cannot be considered certain that this temple in antis beneath which is a snake is that of Asklepios. It may be a heroon: indeed from its small size and the curious way in which it is erected on a basis, this seems likely. The figure in the temple on the coin of Nero does not seem to be Asklepios at all, but an emperor; on similar coins of the B. M. a figure clad in a toga is clearly depicted.

Aphrodite, Poseidon, and Herakles (see above).

This important series of coins furnishes complete proof, as Imhoof has pointed out more than once (see Monn. Grec. p. 158), of the type of the statue of Aphrodite which stood on the Corinthian acropolis. The figure of armed Aphrodite which existed there under the Empire was no archaic figure of an armed goddess, such as the Syrian Astarte, but an unmistakable Greek Aphrodite, using the shield of Ares as a mirror. This is a motive natural to Roman rather than to Greek art, and we may be almost sure that the statue does not date from an earlier period than that of Julius Cæsar. Indeed to his time it would be peculiarly appropriate, considering his descent and pretensions.

Imhoof has also observed that Lenormant’s idea that the helmeted head on the early autonomous coins of Corinth is that of the armed Aphrodite must be given up, seeing that Pausanias is the only writer who speaks of a statue of armed Aphrodite at Corinth, and it is certain that the figure seen by him was not helmeted: there is, therefore, no evidence of the existence at Corinth of a helmeted Aphrodite.

The type of Aphrodite herself is fixed and scarcely varies; no doubt it reproduces the exact scheme of the statue. But the figure or figures of Eros which appear beside her seem to be mere attributes, as they hold wreaths and not bows.

The temple of Aphrodite is represented sometimes as tetrastyle sometimes as hexastyle, sometimes as prostyle and sometimes as peripteral: all of which proves that in matters of architectural detail coins are not trustworthy.

34. — OTHER TYPES at Corinth.

Kronos standing, holds sickle.
Ant. Pius. Paris. (G cxxxv.)

Head of Kronos, sickle over shoulder.

Male figure seated (Populus), clad in himation, inscribed POPVL.

COL . COR.
Verus. Paris. (G cxxxix.)

Military female figure (Achaia?) seated on rock, holds spear and sword; in front, ears of corn.
Geta. Imh. (G cxl.)

Victory flying to left.
M. Aurel. Récanier. (G cxl.i.)

Victory facing.
Augustus. Imh. (G cxl.ii.)

Male figure, Genius, holds patera and cornucopiae, inscribed GEN . COL . COR.
Auton. B. M. (G cxl.iii.)

Palm tree within inclosure.

The following in Minonnet seem to be some of the above types wrongly described; Eros in quadriga; Pan holding pedum; Pharos and ship; Head of Indian Dionysus; Cadmus attacking serpent, (see under Argos—Opheltes.)
Some of the types proper to Corinth are repeated on the coins of other cities. For instance, the seated Hermes, and the Aphrodite of the Acropolis, are repeated on the coins of Patrae. In the same way the Corinthian coins repeat the Argive type of Opheltes.

Caracalla (without and with cypresses). Imh. (H ii.)

The design of the coin illustrates very well the words of Pausanias. Below, we see a basis or pedestal, apparently round; on it, four pillars erected, supporting an aëtoma. In the midst there seems to be a statue. It does not appear, either from Pausanias' words, or from the coin, that the ναίδιον on the pedestal had walls: rather it would seem that the roof rested on pillars only. The terminal figures on the coin may represent smaller tombs, or they may define the bounds of a temenos. The cypress was sacred to Hades: see Lajard, Culte du Cyprès, p. 231.

2.—Paus. ii. 7, 5. 'Εν δὲ τῇ νῦν ἀκροτόλειεν Τύχης ἱερὸν ἐστὶν Ἁκραῖας, μετὰ δὲ αὐτὸ Διοςκούρων. ξώανα δὲ οὕτοι τε καὶ τὸ ἀγαλμα τῆς Τύχης ἔστι.

Æ Autonomous. B. M. Ἀ. Alexander the Great. B. M.
J. Domna. Turin. (H viii.)
Plautilla. B. M. (H ix.)

This figure, the attribution of which is doubtful, has greatly perplexed numismatists. It has been called hitherto a bird-catcher, or, as by Müller (Alex. le Gr. p. 219), Apollo in dancing attitude, holding up taenia. In numismatics the type is peculiar to Sicyon: and as it recurs without variation from the time of Alexander the Great to that of Plautilla, it must almost certainly repeat a Sicyonian work of art.

5.—Paus. ii. 7, 9. Τῷ Ἀπόλλωνι . . . . τὸν δὲ ἐττ’ ἐμοῦ ναιν καὶ τὸ ἄγαλμα Πυθοκλῆς ἄνεβηκεν (cf. 9, 7, ruined temple of Apollo Lycius: 10, 2, adytum of Apollo Carneius).

Apollo in citharoedic dress, holding lyre.

Æ Domna. Leake, Suppl. 145.
Plautilla. M. ii. 200, 381.

It seems not improbable that the Pythocles here mentioned, who is evidently regarded by Pausanias as a well-known man, is the same as the Pythocles mentioned by Pliny (N. H. xxxiv. 51) as a famous artist of the period after Ol. 156. This clue would be of value if we could be sure that the coin reproduced a statue of Pythocles: but this cannot be proved.

6.—Paus. ii. 9, 6. Τῆς δὲ ἀγορᾶς ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ ὑπαίθρῳ Ἰεὺς χαλκοῦς, τέχνη Λυσίππου. Cf. ἐστὶ δὲ Ζεὺς Μειλίχιος . . . σὺν τέχνῃ πεποιημένα οὐδεμιᾷ.

Zeus standing, undraped; holds thunderbolt and sceptre.

Æ Caracalla. B. M. (H x.)
Zeus seated, holding patera and sceptre.

The standing figure of Zeus would certainly well suit the school of Lysippus: it belongs to group 11 of Overbeck’s arrangement (Kunstmyth., ii. p. 151). Zeus is entirely undraped, and of a scheme which especially befits bronze. If the Sicyonian statue of Zeus Meilichius was a copy of that of Argos, it must have been seated, like the second type here cited. See below under Argos.

7.—Paus. ii. 10, 1. 'Εν δὲ τῷ γυμνασίῳ τῆς ἀγορᾶς ὄντι οὐ μακράν Ἡρακλῆς ἀνάκειται λίθου, Σκόπτα πολῆμα. 'Εστι δὲ καὶ ἑτέρῳ ιερῷ Ἡρακλέως.

The figure of Herakles on the coin is unfortunately indistinct: but the deity seems to be bearded, and of somewhat slight build.

8.—Paus. ii. 10, 2. Ἐς δὲ τὸ Ἀσκληπιείον ἐσώθυς . . . . . τῇ μὲν Πανὸς καθήμενον ἀγαλμὰ ἐστὶ (cf. 11, 1, βωμὸς Πανὸς).

Æ Geta. Dresden. (H xvii.) Imh. (H xviii.)
Similar figure, in temple.

AE Caracalla. Paris. (H xix.)

There can be little doubt that we have in this figure a copy of the statue which stood in the temple of Artemis Phereea. We are told that it was brought from Phereae. The coins of Phereae, from the fourth century onwards, present us with a female figure holding two torches or one torch, which may be meant for Artemis, but more probably represents Hecate, a deity greatly worshipped in the south of Thessaly. But the distinction is not important, as the torch-bearing Artemis and Hecate are closely allied.

12.—Paus. ii. 11, 2. Kαταβαίνουσι δέ ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πεδίον ἱερόν ἐστιν ἐνταῦθα Δήμητρος· ἱδρύσαι δέ φασιν αὐτὸ Πλημναῖον.

Head of HEBE (?), hair rolled.

This attribution is not certain, but highly probable. The character of Hebe's head is not unlike that of Hera, but younger and less dignified. She wears no ornaments, but her hair is simply rolled at the back.

The Athene of the coin seems an interesting record of the archaic statue of Dipoenus and Scyllis, whom Pliny gives to the 50th Olympiad, and who were among the first to produce national Greek types of various divinities. The present coin-type represents a figure of Athene retaining the pose of the still older Palladia, but far more refined in detail. The helmet is larger, the aegis on the breast worked out; folds appear in the chiton, and the feet are articulate.

The number of statues of Zeus at Argos is so large that it is not possible to be sure whether we have copies of any of them on coins. It is possible that the type first described (Κ xxv.) may reproduce the figure of the Zeus Meilichius; and the type of the head of Zeus is decidedly fine and early; we may suspect it to be a reminiscence of the head of Polycleitus' statue. With more confidence we may suppose that the standing Zeus of the coins (Κ xxviii.) is a copy of Lysippus' statue; for in this case the coin-type persists practically unchanged through several reigns.

But in all these cases the evidence of copying is internal rather than external; we therefore prefer to leave the matter for future discussion.

The same group in a temple.

This is a clear instance of the copying on coins of a statue, and very instructive. One coin figured (K xxxvii.) differently represents the action of Leto's right hand, which clearly, on the later coins, seems raised to a quiver on her shoulder. On this coin also the head of Leto is turned to the left, on the other coins to the right. But it is easy to see that these slight variations only arise from the fact that in the case of the first coin the artist made an attempt to represent the statue from the front, while in the case of the later coins it is depicted in profile. Combining our representations we can form a fairly complete notion of the statue of Praxiteles. Leto stood clad in a long chiton with diplois, holding some object (a torch?) in her left hand, and raising her right to her shoulder. The small figure of Chloris was close to her elbow, clad like the goddess herself.

EILEITHUIA, holding in each hand a torch, one raised, one lowered.
E Commodus. M. S. iv. 246, 71. (Arig. ii. 31, 210.)
M. Aurelius. Berlin. Two such figures, each with quiver at back, an altar between them. (K xl.)
The reason for supposing this type to represent Eileithuia lies in the fact that there is a type almost identical at Aegium in Achaia, which reproduces a statue of Eileithuia accurately described by Pausanias (vii. 23, 5), ταῖς χεραὶ τῇ μὲν ἐς εὐθὺν ἐκτεταταῖ, τῇ δὲ ἀνέχει δίδα. The quiver might seem more appropriate to Artemis; but she could scarcely be, like Eileithuia, duplicated.

Diomedes, sword in hand, standing before statue of Pallas, on which he lays hands.
Diomedes seated on altar, his leg bent under him, holds sword and Palladium.

Æ Hadrian. B. M. (K xlv.)

It would seem from the not very clear language of Pausanias, that there was a temple of Athene Oxyderkes on the slope of the Acropolis-hill, and another of Athene on the summit. In one of these temples would be probably the statue supposed to have been brought by Diomedes from Ilium. A priori one would naturally suppose this statue to have been in the temple first mentioned, said to have been dedicated by Diomedes. But the coins appear to prove that this was not the case; but that the Ilian Palladium was set up in the temple on the summit of the hill. For the archaic image of Pallas, which on some coins (K xlIII.) Diomedes carries, is identical in details with the image represented on other coins (K xlIII.) as occupying the temple on the Acropolis. In form it is an ordinary archaic Palladium, representing the goddess as stiff and erect, holding a spear in her raised right hand, and a shield on her left arm. Below, the figure passes into a mere column.

Æ Geta. Imh. M. S. iv. 253, 116. (K xlviii.)
Xenophilus and Strato lived probably late in the third century B.C., if we may judge from a tablet bearing their names published by Ross, Inscr. Ined. i. No. 58, in which we find the forms Α and ο. There seems every probability that the coins reproduce their types of the Asklepios and Hygieia. Both are very unusual. The Asklepios is apparently a copy of the statue of Thrasymedes at Epidaurus, and is of thoroughly Pheidian type. The Hygieia is an interesting and remarkable type, differing, I think, from all known statues of the goddess. She is clad in a long chiton, and wears an overdress, of which the end hangs over her left arm.

25.—Paus. II. 23, 7. Κατάγεον οἴκοδόμημα, ἐπὶ αὐτῷ δὲ ἦν ὁ χαλκοῦς θάλαμος, διόν Ἀκρίσιος ποτε ἔπλευρα τῆς θυγατρὸς ἐποίησε.

Æ Hadrian. B. M. (L xlix.).

Although this is probably the only appearance of Danae on coins, the attribution is fairly certain. Danae’s face is turned upwards; her bosom is bare, her extended hands grasp the ends of her garment. Parallel representations on vases and in wall paintings may be found in Overbeck, Kunstmyth., ii. p. 406.

These coins, which have been repeatedly published, and are discussed in the histories of ancient sculpture, are generally allowed to repeat the statue by Thrasymedes. They agree with the words of Pausanias, even to the attitude of the dog, παρακατακείμενος. They thus furnish a strong argument that in other cases also we may expect to find on coins fairly exact copies of works of sculpture. For the connexion of the dog with the Epidaurian worship, see Rev. Arch. 1884, ii. pp. 78, 129, 217.

HYGIEIA standing in round temple.

Hygieia or EPIONE standing, feeds serpent from patera, clad in long drapery.

It is unfortunate that the coin which represents Hygieia in her temple is so indistinct that the details cannot be with certainty recovered. Her right hand appears to be extended, and to hold a patera; and a serpent is visible to left.

The figure which I have termed Hygieia or Epione occurs on early coins. Epione is the more likely attribution, as that deity was from early times acknowledged at Epidaurus as the wife of Asklepios, whereas Hygieia does not seem to have been there recognised publicly until the times of the Antonines.

There still exist at Aegina remains of two harbours (Leake, Morea, ii. 436), both of which are inclosed by two moles, and either of which would correspond to the representation on the coin. Pausanias mentions both, one as the general harbour, near which was the temple of Aphrodite, the other as the secret harbour, near which was a large theatre. On the coin the building in the background looks less like a temple than a theatre, market, or wharf.

The type of Hermes carrying a ram (L v. vi.) must almost certainly be a copy of some work of Aeginetan art, such as the statue of the same subject by Onatas, preserved at Olympia: the Olympian statue, however, wore a chlamys and a chiton, whereas the figure on the coins is altogether naked, like that on the coins of Tanagra, which represents the Hermes Criophorus of Calamis. The stretching of arms and legs on the coin vi. is quite characteristic of Aeginetan art.

TROEZEN.

1.—Paus. II. 30, 6. Ἅθηνᾶν τε σέβουσι Πολιάδα καὶ Σθενάδα ὄνομάζοντες τὴν αὐτὴν, καὶ Ποσειδώνα Βασιλέα ἐπικλήσιν καὶ δὴ καὶ νόμισμα αὐτοῖς τὸ ἄρχαίον ἐπίσημα ἔχει τρίαναν καὶ Ἀθηνᾶς πρόσωπον.
Coin, obv. head of Athene bound with taenia only; rev. trident.

The identification of the head on the figured coins as Athene may be disputed, and is doubted by Imhoof. But Pausanias in his statement as to the coins of Troezen must be repeating matter of common notoriety; and he must refer to the coins of the autonomous series, before one side was occupied by the head of an emperor. The head on the silver, M i. ii., is so bold and strong that it has been taken for that of Apollo; but in some cases it wears an earring, which seems conclusive as to its feminine character. And, if it be feminine, it is more likely, even apart from Pausanias' express statement, to belong to Athene, rather than any other goddess. The absence of the helmet is not unusual in case of early representations of Athene.

2.—Cf. 32, 5. 'Εν δὲ τῇ ἀκροπόλει τῆς Σθενιάδος καλουμένης ναὸς ἑστιν Ἀθηνᾶς. αὐτὸ δὲ εἰργάσατο τῆς θεοῦ τὸ ξόανον Κάλλον Ἀγνυήτης.

Athene (archaic) resembling a Palladium.

This figure of Pallas may be described in the very words already used in describing that at Cleonae, which we supposed to be copied from the work of Dipoenus and Scyllis. This is evidence, so far as it goes, that Callon adhered to the same general scheme as the Cretan artists; although, of course, we must not press the argument, as the die-sinkers may have intended merely to portray the general type of an archaic Athene, as in A xi.

This coin-type is valuable as furnishing evidence—probably the only extant evidence—of the style and date of the artist Hermon of Troezen. The Dioscuri stand naked, with long hair, both arms extended before them, not unlike, in attitude, to the Apollo of Canachus, but more primitive. Their proportions seem to be decidedly slight.

NUMISMATIC COMMENTARY ON PAUSANIAS.

II.

Books III., IV., V., VI., VII., VIII.

[Plates LXV.—LXVIII.]

In the present paper we continue the commentary begun in last year's Journal, and set forth the numismatic facts which run parallel to those books of Pausanias which deal with the remainder of Peloponnesus; Laconia, Messenia, Elis, Achaia, and Arcadia. Athens, Phocis, and Boeotia still remain for future treatment.

In spite of our efforts to be complete, we have already discovered a number of coins of Corinth and Argos and the neighbouring cities which had escaped us, and which present new types, or important varieties of the types which appear in our plates. This will necessitate the publication of a supplement to our first paper. While this is in preparation numismatists will be doing the greatest service if they will let us have casts of any types in their possession which are omitted in the descriptions or the plates of this paper or the last. Casts of unusual coins of imperial times of Phocis or Boeotia will also be most welcome.

For the purposes of the present paper, in addition to the material already laid up by the editors, the authorities of the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris have kindly allowed us to have casts of all the coins in that collection selected as desirable; and Dr. von Sallet, of the Royal Museum of Berlin, has sent to London, with the utmost friendliness and liberality, casts of all important coins of Peloponnesus of imperial times in his keeping.

In this instalment of the work, the numismatic lists and comments have alike been compiled by the English colleague; the Swiss colleague has supplied casts and carefully revised the whole. The text used is that of Schubart, not of Schubring, as stated by a lapsus penneae in the first article. The method of numbering in the plates has been modified for reasons of convenience.

LACEDAEMON.

1.—Paus. III. 10, 7. Τρίτη δὲ ἐκ τῆς ὀδοῦ τῆς εὐθείας ἐκβολὴ κατὰ τὰ δεξίὰ ἐς Καρναὶ ἄγει καὶ ἐς τὸ ἱερὸν τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος. τὸ γὰρ χωρῖον Ἀρτέμιδος καὶ Νυμφῶν ἐστὶν αἱ Κάρναι, καὶ ἀγαλμα ἐστηκεν Ἀρτέμιδος ἐν ὑπαίθρῳ Καρνάτιδος.

Paus. III. 25, 3. Θεών δὲ ἐν τῇ γῇ σφίσιν ἱερὰ ἐστὶν Ἀρτέμιδος τε ἐπικλησιν Ἀστρατείας, ὅτ' ἡς ἐς τὸ πρόσω ἀστρατείας ἐνταῦθα ἐπαινεύτω Ἀμαζόνες, καὶ Ἀπόλλων Ἀμαζόνων. ξύλα μὲν ἀμφότερα, ἀναθεῖναι δὲ λέγουσιν αὐτὰ τὰς ἀπὸ Θερμώδοντος γυναίκας.

ARTEMIS Astrateia? laur. clad in short chiton and endromides, holds out in right, bow? in left, shield and spear.

Ἤ Caracalla. B. M. (N III.)

This attribution is anything but certain. The figure on the coin is, however, apparently female, fully armed, but in an attitude of rest. The object in the right hand seems to have a cord attached, and may be either bow or whip. As to a shield as an attribute of Artemis, see below N XL, XII.

Artemis clad in short chiton, holds branch in right, quiver at shoulder, inscription ΚΥΠΑΡΙΣΣΙΑ. (Obv. Head of Rome.)

This coin was not struck at Cyparissia, but probably at Lacedaemon, on occasion of an agonistic festival.

HERMES Agoraeus, wearing chlamys, to right, holds in left hand caduceus, on left arm infant Dionysus, who raises left hand.

Salonina. Imh. Berlin. (N vii.)

The staff, which is quite clear on N vii., is not to be so clearly seen on v. and vi. But the action of the right hand is the same, and the staff may be there. If so, all the representations would be practically identical, and almost certainly copies of the statue mentioned by Pausanias. The staff which Hermes is carrying in his right hand is probably a thyrsus, towards which the child Dionysus stretches out his hand.

3.—Paus. III. 12, 8. Δακεδαιμονίως δὲ ἔστι μὲν Ἀπόλλωνος Ἀκρείτα βωμός, ἔστι δὲ ἐπονομαζόμενον Γάσηππον ιερὸν Γῆς. Ἀπόλλων δὲ ὑπὲρ αὐτὸ ἱδρυται Μαλεώτης.

III. 13, 3. 'Ο δὲ Κάρνειος, διὰ Οἰκέταν ἐπονομάζουσι, τιμᾶς εἶχεν ἐν Σπάρτῃ καὶ πρὶν Ἡρακλείδας κατελθεῖν, ἱδρυτο δὲ ἐν οἴκῳ Κρίον τοῦ Θεοκλέους, ἀνδρὸς μάντεως. Cf. 14, 6.

A comparison with the coins of Gytheium, N xxiii., xxiv., seems to show that the naked Apollo, N viii., is Carneius. On N ix. we seem to have rather the Pythian form of the god.

Æ Elagabalus. Mion. S. viii. 177, 252. (Sestini, Mus. Hed. III. 61, 45.)

In his Attica (i. 33, 1) Pausanias says that in the temple of Artemis at Brauron there was an archaic xoanon; but in his opinion this was not the original. In the above-quoted passage, he says further that the original statue was still extant at Laodicea in Syria. That the figure on the coins of Laodicea is a copy of this original, carried off from Attica, is sufficiently evident. Pausanias seems to have thought that the Spartan statue of Artemis Orthia had a better claim to have been brought from Taurica than even the Laodicean statue. However that be, there can be no doubt that the statue represented on the Laodicean coins is very original and interesting.

The goddess wears on her head a modius; in one hand she carries not a bipennis but an axe of the form of a socketed celt; she is clad in long drapery, in the disposition of which, as well as in the pose of her legs, but little archaism is visible. Beside her are two stags, which make the identification certain.

The shield is an attribute unusual in the case of Artemis, but not unheard of. Pausanias (iv. 13, 1) heard at Messene of an ancient statue of Artemis, which had on one occasion let fall its shield; and Iphigeneia is sometimes represented as carrying a statue, which in any hands but hers might pass for a Palladium. See Gerhard in Arch. Zeitung, 1849, pl. vii. p. 70. Compare also N III. The form of the axe is very noteworthy.

On the silver coins issued at Athens by Eubulides and Agathocles (Beulé, Monn. d'Ath. p. 287) occurs an archaic figure of Artemis, veiled, wearing modius, holding patera and bow, which has been by some taken for a copy of the statue existing at the time at Brauron, or (as by Beulé) for a copy of an imitation of that statue by Praxiteles, which was preserved on the Athenian acropolis (Paus. I. 23, 7). If either of these views be correct, there were decided differences between the statue carried off by the Persians and that made by the Athenians to replace it.

8.—Paus. III. 17, 2. Δακεδαιμόνιοι πολλοῖς έτεσιν θυσιν τόν τε ναιόν ομολογεί καὶ τό άγαλμα έποιήσαντο 'Αθηνάς χαλκόν Τιτιάδας δε ειργάσατο άνηρ επιχώριον. έποίησε δε καὶ έσματα Δώρια ο Γιτιάδας άλλα τε καὶ ήμνον έσ τήν θεόν. επειργασταί δε το άλτο χαλκό πολλά μεν τόν άθλον ΄Ηρακλέους κ.τ.λ.

Gallienus. Cadalvène, Recueil, pl. II. 35.

Head of Pallas, helmeted.

ΑΕ Domna. Paris. (Ν xiv.)

This identification is advocated by Koner (Zeitschr. f. Münzk. 1845, p. 2) and Jahn, but doubted by Overbeck (Gr. Plast. I. p. 124), who also considers it improbable that the reliefs were on the person of the goddess. It is, however, not easy to explain the words of Pausanias, except on the supposition that the reliefs were on the goddess herself, that is, on her close-fitting chiton, and the representation on the coin, which is quite sui generis, and can scarcely be interpreted except as it is by Koner, seems to clinch the argument. In the upper part of the body we may trace something of womanly form; the shape of the lower part seems to be sacrificed to the exigencies of the reliefs.

The head on No. xiv. must almost certainly be copied from a statue, for the head of a deity, unless so copied, seldom or never appears on imperial coins of Peloponnesus. It is probably a free copy of the head of the statue of Gitiadas. The form of the helmet, half way between the close-fitting and the Corinthian types, is notable; but unfortunately the coin is badly preserved, and the details obscure.

Coins of Melos (Paris Coll. and Br. Mus. Cat., Islands, pl. xxiv. 13) bear a type which seems to reproduce the same statue; the details, however, are not clear. Melos was a Laconian colony. Of the head of this statue we have also a record on Melian coins of imperial times, which bear a head of Pallas distinctly archaic, with long straight tresses falling behind the ear, in a close-fitting helmet (N xv.).

9.—Paus. III. 19, 1. Καὶ τὸ ἄγαλμα ἐνταῦθα ἐνέστηκε. μέγεθος δὲ αὐτοῦ μέτρῳ μὲν οὐδένα ἀνευρόντα οἶδα, εἰκάζοντι δὲ καὶ τριάκοντα εἶναι φαίνοιτο ἀν πήχεις. ἔργον δὲ οὐ Βαθυκλέους ἔστιν, ἄλλα ἀρχαῖον καὶ οὐ σὺν τέχνη πεποιημένον. ὅτι γὰρ μὴ πρόσωπον αὐτῷ καὶ τόδες εἰσίν ἄκρου καὶ χείρες, τὸ λοιπὸν χαλκὸς κλονί ἐστιν εἰκασμένον. ἔχει δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ κεφαλῇ κράνος, λόγχην δὲ ἐν ταῖς χερί καὶ τόξον. τοῦ δὲ ἄγάλματος τὸ βάθρον παρέχεται μὲν βομοῦ σχῆμα, τεθάρθαι δὲ τὸν Τάκινθον λέγουσιν ἐν αὐτῷ. Æ Commodus. B. M. (N xvii.)

Gallienus. Imh.

Leake has shown (Num. Hellen., Europe, p. 55) that the figure on these coins is a copy of the colossus of Apollo at Amyclae. The work seems to be of the same school as the statue of Athene already mentioned, but ruder and earlier, the body showing no approach to the human form. As to the exact form of the body, however, the coins differ: the earlier make it clad and conical, the later like a term. We can scarcely doubt that the later representation (N xvii.) is more faithful, since it belongs to a time when the die cutter took smaller liberties with his model. On it the body of the deity is divided by crossing lines into lozenge-shaped divisions, no doubt representing the plates of bronze; one can even detect on the coin the nails by which these are secured. The head of the deity is archaic, with long curl falling on to the neck, and a queue behind. The whole is let into a stand or basis.

Æ Sept. Sev. B. M. (N xxii.)

Geta. B. M. Mion. ii. 227, 87. Herakles in attitude of Glycon’s figure.

The branch in the hand of the Apollo (N xxii.) reminds one of that which Herakles holds on the coin of Croton, where he is specially described as ΟΙΚΙΣΤΑΣ (Carelli, Num. Ital. Vet. pl. clxxiii. 21; Gardner, Types, pl. v. 2). It may refer to his office as founder; with the other hand he seems to be laying aside his bow. Herakles (N xxii.) is also in an attitude of conciliation; whether the two figures can be reasonably regarded as belonging to one group is a question.

2.—Paus. iii. 21, 7. Ἐτέροθι δὲ Ἀπόλλων Κάρυνεος.

APOLLO naked, right hand raised over his head, in left, which rests on trunk of tree, leaf? beside him on a basis

Similar, without Pan.

Æ Sept. Sev. Mus. Sanc. ii. pl. 24, 210, B.
Carac. Berlin. (N xxiv.)

In the first of these coins the object in the hand of Apollo appears not to be an arrow, but a trefoil leaf; in the other coins it is not clear. The presence of Pan seems to show that Apollo Carneius is here intended; and the Pan and Apollo alike should be, according to the usual tests, copies of statues, as one stands on a basis, the other leans on a pillar.

3.—Paus. III. 21, 7. Πλησιόν δὲ αὐτῶν Διόνυσος. Cf. 22, 2,

Æ Sept. Sev. B. M. (O ii.)

This is a clear instance of the copy of a statue on coins; the type of the statue is, however, quite ordinary. It seems that the temple is rendered on the coin with some exactness. It is seen nearly in profile from its left side. To the extreme left are two pillars, which stand for the front of the temple; next an unroofed space, ναός, in which stands the statue; and furthest to the right an opisthodomos with roof. That this is what is intended seems to be proved by the fact that the corner of the aëtoma does not reach to the furthest pillar; but aëtoma and pillars and the deity himself are all represented in a perspective which is not correct, too much facing the spectator. The pillars are fluted in their upper, plain in their lower half.

Æ Auton. Paris. (P III.)

A comparison of this figure with that of Artemis Laphria on the coins of Patrae (Q vii.—xi.), which reproduces the statue of Menaechmus and Soidas, furnishes sufficient reason for calling this figure also Laphria. It is probably, as the pillar indicates, a copy of a statue, therefore of the statue of Damophon. Damophon was doubtless familiar with the earlier statue of Laphria, which in his time stood not at Patrae but at Calydon in Aetolia, not far from Naupactus, where the Messenians were settled before their city was rebuilt by Epaminondas. The chief variety introduced by him on the older type seems to have been to make the goddess grasp a spear instead of placing her hand on her side.

ELIS.

The coins of Elis present us unfortunately in but very few instances with copies of the numberless works of art which existed at Olympia. There are, however, extant a very few important pieces struck in the reign of Hadrian, and in that of Septimius Severus, which are clearly intended as medals to perpetuate certain works of art, and on them we have some of the most satisfactory reproductions of ancient statues extant on coins. Among the statues thus reproduced are the Olympian Zeus of Pheidias, the Aphrodite Pandemos of Scopas, and the Dionysus of Praxiteles. In the recent excavations at Olympia a large number of coins of Elis of the Imperial age were found, and are now in the Athenian coin-cabinet. See Postolacca’s Catalogue of coins presented in 1883–4.

This identification is due to R. Weil (Archäol. Aufsätze E. Curtius gewidmet, 1884), who publishes the coin of Severus, of which a cut is here added.
The coin of the British Museum, P xxiv, though unfortunately in a very poor state of preservation, is in a better style than this, and apparently more faithful to the original. The attitude is less stiff, and more graceful. The mantle of Aphrodite seems to envelop her sides and back completely, and the chiton reaches to her feet; only her head and arms appear; in the treatment of these and of the drapery the charm of the statue must have consisted.

[This is a mistake; the head is really of the Olympian Zeus, P xxiii.]

Dr. Weil has ably shown that the figure of Dionysus on the coin of Hadrian is very probably a copy of the statue of Praxiteles. In addition to internal evidence, the fact that the other coins of Hadrian bear copies of statues points in this direction. We reproduce Weil's cut, made under his direction from the coins.
The forms of the god are rather effeminate; his garment, fastened at his neck, falls round his lower limbs in full folds; the left leg is crossed over the right. His left elbow rests on a prop over which also hangs his upper garment. Beside him is on one side a panther, on the other his thyrsus and tympanum. In his left hand is a cup, in his right he lifts aloft a rhyton.

This type has perplexed many writers: it has been termed Mons Panachaicus, or (by Leake) the tomb of Patreus; but Kenner's view (St. Flor. p. 74) is preferable, according to which it represents the casket in which the statue of Bacchus was kept.

On the reverse of the coins above described appears a figure clad in a short chiton, holding in one hand a torch, in the other a short thyrsus or spear. This appears in our plates, Q xii. Leake supposes it to be a representation of the figure of Dionysus contained in the chest. A Dionysus it may be, but it can scarcely stand for a statue supposed to have been brought from Ilium, and so, presumably, of archaic type. There is something to be said for the view of Kenner (St. Flor., l. c.), that the deity represented is rather Artemis Tricaria, with whose cultus the box containing the Dionysus was closely connected.

(If it may be doubted if this supposed figure of Artemis be not her priestess as in Q XIII.)

Quiver with strap and hound.

The figure of Artemis Laphria on coins VI.–X. is almost unvaried; the only marked variation being that the bow rests in some cases on a high pedestal, in some cases on a low pedestal, in some cases on the ground. The goddess stands, her head slightly turned to her left, clad in a short chiton with diplois which leaves the right breast bare, a chlamys hanging over her left shoulder, high cothurni on her feet. Her hair is in a knot at the back; a quiver is at her shoulder. Her attitude is one of ease, yet not quite free from stiffness; the left knee slightly advanced, the right hand resting on her side; in the left hand a bow. The type is clearly a copy of the cultus-statue of Artemis Laphria; this is even proved to demonstration by coin No. X. where it appears side by side with the Aphrodite of the Corinthian acropolis. We thus arrive at an interesting result. It is distinctly stated by Pausanias that the cultus-image at Patrae was the work of Menaechmus and Soidas of Naupactus. On this Brunn (Gr. K. I. 112) remarks that its date must be earlier than the settlement of Naupactus by the Messenians at the beginning of the Peloponnesian war. And Pausanias says that the sculptors must have lived not much after the archaic sculptors Callon of Aegina, and Canachus of Sicyon. But the statement of Pausanias seems exaggerated in view of the style of the figure on the coins, which may perhaps be assigned to the middle of the fifth century, but can with difficulty be given to an earlier date. In any case this will be one of the earliest statues which represent Artemis in Amazonian form, earlier than the statue of Strongylios (A I. II.), and as early as the rude relief from Asopus, Arch. Zeitung 1882, pl. vi. 1.

Coin Q xiv. is particularly valuable. The image on it is shewn by the temple in which it is enclosed to be a copy of a cultus-image, probably of that of Athena Panachaïs. The figure of Athene holding in one hand a patera, in the other a spear appears on the coins of many of the cities of Peloponnesus, whether they had an ancient cult of Athena or not. We may account for this fact in either of two ways: (1) we may suppose that the various cities produced on their coins the widely-known type of the statue at Patrae, or (2) we may suppose that the cities commonly established within their own walls a shrine of Athena Panachaïs with a statue copied from the metropolitan statue of Patrae; and that these local imitations were again imitated on the coins. It may count against the second view that Pausanias mentions no other temples of Athena Panachaïs.

The presence of the throne sufficiently proves that we have in this case a copy of a statue. That the figure is of Hera is however not certain. The figure of Hermes seated (R iv.) is closely similar to a type of Corinth (F cx., cxli.), but not identical, for at Patrae the god holds a purse in his right hand, which he does not at Corinth. In this case it is clear that either the people of Patrae copied their cultus-statue from that of the Corinthians, or the people of Corinth from the Patreans. The standing figure of Hermes (R v.) also nearly resembles one on a coin of Corinth (E lxxxvi.).

AEGIUM.

1.—Paus. vii. 23, 5. Αγιεύσι δὲ Εἰλείθυιας ἱερὸν ἐστὶν ἀρχαίον, καὶ ἡ Εἰλείθυια ἐς ἄκρων ἐκ κεφαλῆς τους πόδας ύψαματι κεκάλυπται λεπτῷ, ξώιαν τῆν προσώπου τε καὶ χειρῶν ἄκρων καὶ σοῦδῶν ταῦτα δὲ τοῦ Πεντελησίου λίθου πεποίηται καὶ ταῖς χεραῖ τῇ μὲν ἐς εὐθὺν ἐκτεταίται, τῇ δὲ ἀνέχει δᾶδα. . . . . . ἔργον δὲ τοῦ Μεσσηνίου Δαμοφόντος ἐστὶ τὸ ἀγαλμα.

L. Verus. Mus. Arig. i. 5, 76.

Geta. Paris. (Figure turretted.) Inscr. ΑΙΓΙΕΩΝ ΑΣΙ (R vii.).

The identification of the figure on R vii., viii., as Eileithuia cannot be regarded as certain. If we accept the identification we must suppose that the word δᾶς has fallen out after ἐκτεταίται, ‘in one hand she holds out a torch, in the other holds up a torch’: and in support of this emendation we may cite the occurrence of δᾶδας in the plural in the next line. On the other hand the Paris coin (R vii.) presents in this view difficulties. On it the head of the goddess wears a turreted crown, which seems inappropriate to Eileithuia. The final letters of the inscription on this coin are uncertain; all that is visible is ACI which may stand for 10 assaria, but may also be the beginning of some explanatory word like the ΖΕΥΣ ΜΕΓΑΣ, which occurs at Aegium beside the figure of Zeus. Nearly similar are the two figures on a coin of Argos, K xl., which are explained in the text as two Eileithuiæ.

The following may, perhaps, be a representation of Eileithuia:—
Female figure, hair in knot, and clad in long chiton with diplois; holds in extended right an object which may be a torch, her left hand hangs by her side.

Æ Auton. Obv. head of Artemis. B. M. Klagenfurt. (R viii.)

Engraved in Wieseler's Denkmaeler (II. 57, 729) and Gerhard, Ant. Bildw. cccix., 1, is a figure of Eileithuia professedly taken from a coin of Aegium. It is, however, evidently badly drawn, and appears to be rather a copy of a figure of Eileithuia or Demeter at Bura.

2.—Paus. VII. 23, 7. Τὴς δὲ Εἰλείθυιας οὖ μακρῶν Ασκληπιου τέ ἐστι τέμενος καὶ ἀγάλματα Τηλείας καὶ Ασκληπιοῦ. Ιαμβεῖον δὲ ἐπὶ τῷ βάθρῳ τῶν Μεσσηνίων Δαμοφόντα εἶναι τῶν εἰργασμένων φησίν.

Æ M. Aurel. Vienna.
Sept. Sev. Loebbecke. (R x.)

Asklepios seated, and Hygieia standing; between them, altar entwined by serpent.

There can be scarcely a doubt that these figures reproduce the group of Damophon; on all the coins the snake-entwined altar appears as a sort of identification; and the separate figures on IX. and X. are exactly reproduced in the group on XI. We thus gain definite and welcome information as to the style of Damophon, information which seems to show that in representing Asklepios he followed the type of the Zeus of Pheidias. In his Hygieia, also, which is of noble and majestic type, he seems to have followed the traditions of the best school. This confirms the view of Brunn (Gr. K., I. 291), 'we shall not err in recognising in Damophon one of the most religious artists of his time, who endeavoured to retain art at that level of moral elevation to which it had been raised, principally by Pheidias.'

3.—Paus. VII. 23, 9. 'Εστι δὲ καὶ Διὸς ἐπίκλησιν Σωτῆρος ἐν τῇ ἄγορᾷ τέμενος, καὶ ἀγάλματα ἐσελθόντων ἐν

24, 4. Ἐστὶ δὲ καὶ ἄλλα Αἰγιεύσιν ἀγάλματα χαλκοῦ πεποιημένα, Ζεὺς τε ἡλικιαν παῖς καὶ Ἡρακλῆς, οὗτὸς ἔχουν πω γένεια, 'Αγελάδα τέχνη τοῦ Ἀργείου.

Archaic statue of Zeus on basis, naked, without beard, holds in raised right, thunderbolt, on extended left arm, eagle.

The British Museum coin (R xii.) bears the inscription ΗΜΙΟΒΕΛΙΝ (ἥμιοβόλιν), shewing its current value. The inscription on the Fontana coin is in the engraving in the Mus. Font., ΖΕΥϹ ΜΕΓΑϹ, the second word being indistinct, so that there stood on the coin either ΖΕΥϹ ΜΕΓΑϹ or, perhaps, ΖΕΥϹ ΣΩΤΗΡ. On the Paris coin (R xiii.) the reading seems to be ΑΙΓΙΕΩΝ ΠΑΙϹ, 'the child of the people of Aegae.' The figure of Zeus on both the coins on our plate is beardless. There can be no question that this striding archaic figure is intended to represent a statue; this is proved by the basis or plinth, sometimes hung with wreaths, on which he stands. A doubt may, however, be entertained which of the statues of Zeus mentioned by Pausanias is here intended; he speaks of two, both archaic, and both beardless. He seems to ascribe one of the two to Ageladas of Argos, and our coin-type is in attitude just like that which reproduces the statue by Ageladas preserved at Messene (P v.). It is not important to decide the question, as the attitude of the figure of Zeus on the coins is quite conventional. The hinder foot does not rest flat on the ground, but the heel is raised; and the anatomy of the body is well rendered, but the treatment of the hair, which falls in long curls, is archaic.

There seems insufficient foundation for Jahn's theory that Zeus under this form is regularly Polieus.

Zeus as an infant suckled by the she-goat Amaltheia; on either side, tree; above, eagle with spread wings.

The proper home of the myth of Amaltheia was in Crete; but there was probably at Aegium a local legend which in some way connected the name of the city with her, Δήμιον with αἶξ.

4.—Paus. VII. 24, 2. Καὶ τέταρτον Ὠμαγυρῶς Διί. ἑνταῦθα Δίος καὶ Ἀφροδίτης ἐστὶ καὶ Ἀθηνᾶς ἀγάλματα. Ὠμαγυρίος δὲ ἐγένετο τῷ Διὶ ἐπίκλησις, ὅτι Ἀγαμέμνον ἡθροισεν, κ.τ.λ.

Æ of Achaean League:—

Obv. Zeus standing, naked; holds Nike and long sceptre (R xv.).

Rev. Female figure seated, holds wreath and long sceptre (R xvi.).

As all the bronze coins of the Achaean League bear these types, they would seem to represent the principal deities of the place of meeting of the League. After the destruction of Helice, this was Aegium, and solemn sacrifices were offered to the principal deities of that city. It seems that the historical associations connected with Zeus Homagyrius made him a peculiarly suitable patron-deity for the League.

The figure on the coin, a naked Zeus, holding Victory in his hand, may well be a copy of a statue set up in this temple in the days of the revival of the League, or possibly at an earlier period. The figure of the reverse may, perhaps, be Demeter Panachaia, but it certainly has none of the attributes of Demeter. It would therefore be preferable to regard it as representing not Demeter but Achaia personified. Similarly Aetolia appears on coins of the Aetolian League, Bithynia on those of the Bithynian kings, Roma on those of Rome, &c.

The following is certainly Demeter:—

Τοξευούσῃ δὲ εἰκασται reminds us of the phrase used by Pausanias of Artemis Laphria at Patrae; and the figure on R xxii. is apparently a variation on the archaic Laphria of Menaechmus and Soidas, the goddess holding a torch in her right hand, instead of resting it on her side.

Æ Caracalla. Munich.

Geta. B. M. (S I.)

APHRODITE partly nude; holds sceptre.

Æ Donna. Mion. II. 165, 128. (Vaillant.)

It is not certain whether the figure on S I. is of Demeter or of Eileithua. The outstretched right hand would tell rather in favour of the latter attribution, it being very usual to find on vases figures of Eileithua with outstretched hands, a gesture intended to indicate a smooth course in childbirth. The phrase of Pausanias strictly taken would seem to assert that the figure of Demeter alone was draped, those of Aphrodite, Dionysus, and Eileithua all undraped; but it can scarcely be supposed that Eileithua would be nude. As to Eucleides of Athens see Brunn (Gr. K. I. p. 274), who conjectures that he worked for the people of Bura when they restored their city soon after its destruction in B.C. 373. In that case he would be a contemporary of Damophon, a period which will very well suit the figure on S I. We shall return to Euclidean under Aegira.

2.—Paus. viii. 25, 10. Καταβάντων δὲ ἐκ Βούρας ὄς ἐπὶ θάλασσαν ποταμὸς τε Βουραίκος ὄνομαζόμενος καὶ Ἦρακλῆς οὐ μέγας ἐστὶν ἐν σπηλαίῳ ἐπίκλησιν μὲν καὶ τοῦτον Βουραίκος.

HERAKLES bearded, standing; raised club in right hand, lion's skin in left; behind him, bow.

AE Geta. Mion. II. 166, 129. Geta. Vienna. (S III.)

There is an apparent discrepancy between the type of the figure in the shrine or cave on S II. and the figure of Herakles on S III. The former seems to hold a spear, and is so described by v. Duhn in Mittheil. d. d. Inst. Ath. III. 62; the latter clearly holds a club. But considering the very small size of the figure on S II. we can scarcely insist upon this apparent difference. It is likely that in both cases a figure of Herakles is intended, of which figure S III. gives us, of course, the best idea. This figure is of stiff and decidedly archaic type, dating from not later than the middle of the fifth century. The antiquity of the Buraic cultus of Herakles is shewn by its seat being in a cave, and by the survival in connection with it of a primitive oracle by lot. Beside the cave on S II. is a portico, and above it, on the top of the hill, a temple, no doubt of one of the deities mentioned by Pausanias in the passage above quoted.

ZEUS seated, in attitude of the Olympian deity; holds Victory and sceptre.

Plautilla. B. M. (S vi.) Sest. Ic. No. 4.

This representation, though of very ordinary character, yet, if we suppose it a copy of Eucleides’ work, has interest as shewing that Eucleides adhered to the Pheidian school in his statue of Zeus, as indeed we might suppose from his representing a seated Zeus at all. Eucleides was probably a contemporary of Damophon, and he seems, if we may judge from the very slight evidence which remains (see under Bura), to have followed the same tendencies.

Tyche as above, face to face with Eros winged, who stands with legs crossed leaning on a long torch or staff: between them, altar entwined by serpent?

Pallas clad in long chiton, thrusting with lance, and holding before her oval shield.

This is a most interesting illustration of what Pausanias considered to be the early style of Pheidias. The character of the figure on our coin is far earlier than the Athenian statues of Pallas by Pheidias, and in type approaches such figures as the Athene Chalicioecus N xiii., or the statue by Dipoenus and Scyllis at Cleonae H I. The device on the shield of the goddess is on our coin (S x.) not clear, it looks like the upper part of a human figure; in the Arigoni Cat. it is drawn as the upper part of a Giant or Triton. It may very probably be only a winged Gorgoneion. The hair of the goddess seems to fall in a queue behind; her closely-fitting chiton is divided into a set of vertical bands, which bands may possibly have been adorned with scenes in relief, as in the case of the Pallas of Gitiadas; her aegis falls over her bosom as a breast-plate. The type is fully discussed by Kenner (St. Flor. p. 79).

Both of these types are, on coins of so early a period, of unexampled singularity. They are discussed by Imhoof l.c. One of the most curious features of the supposed fisherman are his boots, which are not merely turned up, but seem to end in serpents; his clothes too are girt up in an extraordinary fashion.

We cannot venture to identify the various types of Artemis. The figure holding two torches (S xxiv.) nearly resembles that at Mantinea (S xvii.), and that at Caphyae (T xiv.). The figure described by Prokesch-Osten as a seated Artemis must almost certainly be a personification of Arcadia.

The autonomous coins (Τ iv. and v.) give us no doubt a group invented by the die-sinker, and not a copy of any sculptural work. Τ vi., on the other hand, seems, from the presence of the Term, to be a reproduction of a statue, very possibly that of Eucheir, who was, as Brunn (Gr. Kün., i. 551) maintains, an artist of early imperial times, or thereabouts. The general type is not unlike that of the Hermes on the Ephesian Column, a type widely spread in Roman times (Journ. Hell. Stud. iii. 96).

It is interesting to compare the birds' heads on the coins T x., xi., with the exact description of Pausanias. They are an extreme instance of the dislike of the Greeks for monstrous forms, reducing the terrible Stymphalian birds of the tale to mere ordinary water-fowl. It is very curious, too, that Herakles should be represented as attacking these birds with club rather than bow.

ZEUS seated facing, on throne; holds in raised right, sceptre; himation over left shoulder.

Head of Zeus.

R & E Auton. B. M. &c.
We can scarcely hesitate to consider the facing Zeus (V i.) as a reminiscence of the statue by Cephisodotus and Xenophon, set up soon after B.C. 370. The figure seems to be of the noble Attic type. What Zeus holds in his left hand it is unfortunately not possible to distinguish.

In the Brunswick cabinet is a coin of Sept. Severus, on which is a figure in attitude and dress resembling V ii. but the head bearded and turned to the right. It is therefore very doubtful if the figure in the plate be of Artemis.

2.—Paus. VIII. 38, 5. Ἐστὶ δὲ ἐν τῷ Ἀυκαίῳ Πανὸς τα ἱερὸν καὶ περὶ αὐτὸ ἀλὸς δένδρων, καὶ ἰππόδρομος τε καὶ πρὸ αὐτοῦ στάδιον.

1.—Paus. viii. 38, 5. * 'Εστι δὲ ἐν τῷ Λυκαίῳ . . . . στάδιον τὸ δὲ ἄρχαιον τῶν Λυκαίων ἦγον τὸν ἄγωνα ἐνταύθα.

The early silver coins of the Arcadians, having on the obverse a seated figure of Zeus and on the reverse a female head, were formerly attributed to Lycosura and regarded as illustrative of the cultus of Zeus Lycaeus, and of Despoena. It is, however, shown in Imhoof's Monnaies Grecques, p. 196, that they were probably issued at Heraea, and have reference to the cultus of Zeus at Olympia and that of Artemis at Heraea.

It may, perhaps, be doubted whether the statue which served as model for the coin V xxi. was the statue by Endoeus, removed to Rome by Augustus, or the later statue called Hippia brought to supply its place. Brunn (G. K. i. 118) has shewn that the date of Endoeus must be brought down to about B.C. 500, and the type of statue on our coin is not inappropriate to such a time; but on the other hand it is unlikely that the die-cutters of Tegea would attempt in the time of Severus to reproduce a statue removed to Rome, rather than one which remained among them, and the attitude on the coin is well suited to Athenic Hippia if we suppose her driving in her chariot against the Giants. There is a likeness between the type on this coin and that which at Pellene probably reproduces an early statue by Pheidias, S x.

NUMISMATIC COMMENTARY ON PAUSANIAS.

III.

BOOKS IX. X., I. 1–38.

AND SUPPLEMENT.

[PLATES LXXIV—VIII.]

WITH this third part our Numismatic Commentary is completed. It consists of three sections:—

(1) Boeotia and Phocis (Paus. IX. X.)
(2) Athens (Paus. I. 1–38.)
(3) Supplement; containing coins of Peloponnesus omitted in parts I. and II. of the Commentary.

The Athenian section of the work involved great difficulties, especially in view of the fact that it was difficult to treat of the Athenian coins without reference to reliefs and other works of art of Athens. This difficulty the compilers have met as best they could: the Athenian coin-lists were drawn up in the first instance by the Swiss colleague.

Special thanks are due to Herr Arthur Loebbecke and Professor Rhousopoulos of Athens for most liberal envois of casts: also to Professor Michaelis for valuable hints and corrections in the Athenian section.

Head of Hera in profile, wearing pointed stephané.

B. M. Cat. pl. ix. 12.

The reverse of the bronze coin is a cow, which was sacrificed to Hera, as a bull to Zeus. See Paus. ix. 3, 8. An ox was a dedicatory offering of the Plataeans at Delphi: Paus. x. 15, 1, and 16, 6.

The two silver coins with the head of Hera are fixed by Mr. Head (B. M. Cat. l.c.) to B.C. 387–374. They are thus contemporary with the earlier activities of Praxiteles. We cannot with confidence assert that they are in any sense copied from his statue, but they will illustrate it as works of contemporary art.

26, 1. Temple of Herakles Hippodetus.

HERAKLES advancing with club and bow; carrying off tripod; shooting; stringing bow; or strangling serpents.

A. Auton. Fifth century.

These types, representing the exploits of Herakles, are given in the B. M. Cat. to B.C. 446–426. In any case they are much earlier than the time of Praxiteles, and can have nothing to do with his pediments. The Herakles holding club and bow is the most interesting figure, and seems clearly to stand for the Herakles Promachos ascribed to Daedalus. But it can resemble that statue only in pose and attributes; in the execution the die-cutter followed the ideas and customs of his own time. Compare the Messenian coin Π IV.

The reading in the passage first cited is corrupt: Kayser has suggested ἐπιχώριος in the place of πλῆρες υπὸ τοῦ. See Brunn, G.K. I. 297. The date of Onasimedes is unknown. The figure on the coin is certainly archaic, as is proved not merely by the beard and the long drapery, but by a certain stiffness of pose and hardness in the outline of the back. We may compare the Athenian coin CC VI.

The temple of X III. containing a statue of the hunting Artemis and flanked by palm-trees is clearly the temple by the Euripus. The statue X v. is not greatly different from that on X III., and the difference in the number of pillars is not essential.

3.—Paus. ix. 20, 4. 'Εν δὲ τοῦ Διονύσου τῷ ναῷ θέας μὲν καὶ τὸ ἄγαλμα ἄξιον, λίθου τε ἐν Παρίῳ καὶ ἐργον Καλώμιδος, θαύμα δὲ παρέχεται μεϊζον ἐτὶ τὸ Τρίτων.

Under a roof, supported by two Atlantes on pillars, young Dionysus wearing nebris and boots; holds kantharos and thyrsos: below Triton swimming to left looking back.

Imhoof, followed by Curtius, published this coin as giving a representation of the statue by Calamis, as well as of the Triton in the temple. Wolters, however, maintains (1) that the Triton at Tanagra was no work of art but a specimen preserved by pickling; (2) that the type of Dionysus on the coin is certainly not earlier than the time of Pheidias, and cannot represent a work of Calamis. There is force in these observations: perhaps a solution of the difficulty may be found in this direction; the Triton may be introduced as a sort of mint-mark or local symbol of the city of Tanagra of which the pickled Triton was the chief boast. And the building represented on the coin may not be the temple of Dionysus, but a shrine with roof supported by two Atlantes, and containing not the statue by Calamis, but one of later date.

The following may be a figure of Dionysus:—

Male figure standing to right, in raised right, sceptre or thyrsus, in left an object which looks like a huge ear of corn or bunch of grapes.

This figure is on so small a scale that the details are obscure. The god seems to wear a chlamys or nebris over the shoulders: whether he is bearded or beardless is uncertain. This figure should from the analogy of the other small coins of Tanagra represent a statue; and it is more like what we should expect in a Dionysus of Calamis than the figure of the previous coin.
4.—Paus. IX. 22, 1. 'Εν Τανάγρα δὲ παρὰ τὸ ιερὸν τοῦ Διονύσου Θεμιδός ἐστιν, ὁ δὲ Ἀφροδίτης, καὶ ὁ τρίτος τῶν ναῶν 'Απόλλωνος, ὁμοῦ δὲ αὐτῷ [καὶ] Ἀρτέμις τε καὶ Λητώ.

Ἀεί Germanicus. Imh. (X x.) B. M. Eckhel, Syllote pl. iii. 10. Commodus (Germanicus?) Mus. Sanelem., pl. 24, 201.

This figure is of the usual archaic type, much like the Apollo of Tectaeus and Angelion at Delos (CC xi.—xiv.) and decidedly more archaic than that of Canachus at Miletus, since the legs seem to be parallel to each other as well as the arms. On the coin the hard outlines of chest and hips are conspicuous. This figure may be a copy of the statue at Delium, traditionally said to have come out of a Phoenician ship.

5.—Paus. IX. 22, 1. Ἐς δὲ τοῦ Ἐρμοῦ τὰ ιερὰ τοῦ τε Κριοφόρου καὶ δν Πρόμαχον καλοῦσι, τοῦ μὲν ἐς τὴν ἑπίκλησιν λέγοντι ὡς ὁ Ἐρμῆς σφίσιν ἀποτρέψαι νόσον λοιμόθεν περὶ τὸ τεῖχος κρίδων περιενεγκῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τούτῳ Κάλαμος ἐποίησεν ἄγαλμα Ἐρμοῦ ἐφέροντα κρίνων ἐπὶ τῶν άμῶν. . . .

HERMES Criophorus; naked, facing.

Hermes Promachus facing, holds in right hand a stigil, in left a caduceus (?)

Ἀεί Trajan. B. M. (X xiii.) See however B. M. Cat. p. 66.

Hermes naked, his feet winged, standing to right, caduceus in left hand; beside him a tree on which sits an eagle; right hand rests on hip, left on tree.
The first of these types (XL, XII.) clearly reproduces the Hermes of Calamis. One arm of the god passes round the forefeet and one round the hindfeet of the ram; on one coin the hands seem to meet on the breast as in the well-known Athenian statue of Hermes carrying a bull, on the other coin one hand seems to be higher than the other. The pose of the god is stiff and his legs rigid: he is naked. He is also beardless, but whether his feet are winged, the scale of the coin makes it impossible to say.

The second type (XIII.) is identified by means of the strigil, if it be a strigil, with Hermes Promachos. This type seems to represent an original of the fifth century. The hair of the god is long, his left leg is advanced and bent, but he can scarcely be said to lounge.

The third type (XIV.—XVI.) is connected with the temple of Hermes Promachus by the tree whereon the eagle sits, which is doubtless the andrachnus of the story. At the foot of the tree is a curved object which may be a strigil. The figure is youthful and wears short hair, but the pose is somewhat stiff.

One is tempted to bring this group into connexion with the statues of Athene Ergane and of Plutus standing by her, mentioned by Pausanias (26, 8). But the taller figure has none of the attributes of Athene, and the shorter figure is clearly a draped goddess and no representation of Plutus. The statues of Aphrodite resting on a draped archaic female figure are collected by Gerhard in his paper Venere Proserpina, plates vii.—xii. See also R. Schneider, Statuette der Artemis, Vienna, 1886.

3. OTHER TYPES at Thespiae.

Apollo with hair in queue seated to right on cippus, in citharoedic costume; holds lyre.

Here again we are at first sight tempted to see a copy of a monument described by Pausanias, the seated statue of Hesiod thus described by Pausanias (30, 3): Κάθηται δὲ καὶ Ἡσιόδος κυθάραν ἐπὶ τοῖς γόνασιν ἔχων, οὔδὲν τι οἰκεῖον Ἡσιόδῳ φόρμα. But the figure is clearly beardless, which we can scarcely suppose Hesiod to have been. It is, however, open to question whether Pausanias may not have taken an Apollo Citharoedus for a Hesiod.

PARNASSUS within wreath; inscribed ΠΥΟΙΑ.

In the engraving of Millingen, Parnassus appears to be depicted on the coin much in the style of modern landscape-painting, a mountain with three summits. This is for Greek art a most unusual mode of representation, the nearest parallel being the type of Mons Argaeus on the coins of Caesarea in Cappadocia, and the mountains on two coins of Amisus, struck by Trajan and Hadrian (Imh.)

2.—Paus. x. 5, 13. τὸν δ' ἐφ' ἡμῶν τῷ θεῷ ναὸν ὕκοδόμησαν μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερῶν οἱ Ἀμφικτύοις χρημάτων, ἀρχιτέκτων δὲ [τις] Σπινθάρος ἐγένετο αὐτοῦ Κορίνθιος.

Front of tetrastyle temple, with pediment containing standing figures: E (Delphic E1) between pillars.

The pediment is variously represented on these two coins: on No. xxii. there seems to be a standing figure with hand raised between two crouching animals; on No. xxiii. there seem to be several figures.

For this coin our only authority is the plate of Sestini's work, which is not altogether trustworthy; the lyre seems impossibly small, and the letters ΠΥΟΙΑ may be suspected; in fact it is not unlikely that the figure described by Sestini may be identical with that in the next description.

Caracalla. Mion. II. 98, 31 (Vaillant).

The types thus far described are such as can with reasonable probability be supposed really to represent the temple at Delphi and objects contained in it. First we have the front of the temple (X xxii.) supported by six Ionic columns and surmounted by a pediment, in which may be discerned a standing figure with arm raised as if to strike, and two animals crouching in the corners. Steps lead up to the temple. The letter E, which occupies the intercolumniation, is no doubt the mysterious Delphic ει as to which Plutarch has written: it here stands, in the shorthand usual in Greek art, for all the wise and witty sayings set up in the pronaûs. Next comes a side view of the same temple (X xxiv.), the pediment occupied by a mere disk. In the front appears a naked standing figure of Apollo, his elbow resting on a column. This figure repeated in X xxvi. would seem to be the principal statue of Apollo in the Temple. Two other sets of coins present to us a figure in general pose closely like this, but varied in attribute and detail. Of one set, only known from the descriptions of Vaillant, we are unable to figure a specimen. The other type appears as Y I. Here the figure of Apollo is doubly localised, by the presence of the river-god, and by the tripod on a stand in the background, which tripod is the type of Y II. It has been wrongly supposed that this tripod stands for that dedicated by the Greeks after Plataea and placed on the brazen serpents still preserved at Constantinople (cf. Paus. x. 13, 9), wrongly, since in Pausanias' time the tripod had already disappeared and only the stand remained. Rather it stands for the sacred tripod whereon the soothsaying priestess, the Pythia, sat to deliver her oracles. On the coin published by Sestini it is inscribed ΠΥΘΙΑ; this inscription, supposing it really to exist, is somewhat ambiguous: it may indicate that the tripod was dedicated in memory of a victory in the Pythian games, or it may have a more local signification.

When we reach the question in what part of the temple the statues copied on these coins existed we land in great difficulties. The two statues mentioned by Pausanias are that of Apollo Moeragetes, and a golden statue undescribed, kept in the
The latter statue is mentioned by various writers, but not described. Wieseler (Denkm. ii. 134) observes that the statue probably held a lyre, but even this is not completely established by the passages he cites, Plutarch, de Pyth. orac. 16, Sulla 12. It is therefore not improbable that the figure on the coins above mentioned may be the Apollo of the adytum, though we must mention as an alternative possibility that that statue is repeated rather on some of the coins mentioned below which bear the type of a Citharoedic Apollo.

The golden statue can scarcely be supposed to be of earlier date than the times of Onomarchus, or it would probably have been seized by him.

We have here a large group of types of Apollo the origin of which we cannot refer to any known statue at Delphi. The first type (Y III.) certainly has a statuesque appearance, and Y IV. belongs to that class of representations of Apollo Cithaeroedus of which the origin is attributed to Scopas. As to these see Overbeck in the Berichte of the Saxon Academy, 1886. Wieseler (Denkmaeler, II. 134a) regards the figure on the coin as a copy of a statue in the theatre of Delphi. The seated figures of Apollo cannot be traced back to a sculptural original: one of them (Y VII.) belongs to a period when we should expect the die-sinker to invent a type for himself, and not to copy a statue; the other two are of imperial times, but cannot be identified. The latter of the two heads of Apollo (Y VIII., IX.) is probably copied from a statue; the queue falling on the neck of the god behind, and the severe features seem to indicate a work of early art.

This type may be compared with those of Athens (AA xv., xvi.). The pose and attributes of the goddess belong to the time when the stiff archaic Palladia had been superseded by statues of softer outline and gentler movement, but before Pheidias had entirely recreated the ideal of the deity.

We meet here with a difficulty: Pallas appears fighting in two different attitudes; and it is impossible to say with certainty which is nearer to the sculptural work of the sons of Polycle, Timacles and Timarchides. But the date of these artists is later than that of the coins, 3rd century B.C.

ANTICYRA.

1.—Paus. x. 36, 8. Ὁ ἔστι δὲ σφιστὶ ἐπὶ τῷ ἔριμεν Ποσειδών οὗ μέγα ἱερὸν, λογάσιν ψιλοδυμένον λίθους: κεκοιλαται δὲ τὰ ἐντός. το δὲ ἀγαλμα ὀρθὸν χαλκοῦ πεποιημένου, βέβηκε δὲ ἐπὶ δεξιὰ τῷ ἐτέρῳ τῶν ποδῶν κατὰ τοῦτο δὲ ἐχει καὶ τὴν χεῖρα ἐπὶ τῷ μηρῷ, ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐτέρᾳ χειρὶ τρίαπώ ἐστιν αὐτῷ.

This type and the head of Poseidon are two sides of the same coin. The torch borne by Artemis is distinctive, and gives us reason to think that the figure of the coin is, if not exactly a copy, at all events a free reproduction of the Anticyran statue of Artemis by the sons of Praxiteles, Cephisodotus and Timarchus. The old reading was ἑργῶν τῶν Ἐραχετέλους, and the statue is cited by Brunn (O. K.) and other writers as a work of Praxiteles himself. And in fact the reading of our text does not exclude Praxiteles as the artist, cf. the phrase ἵνα τῶν Μύρωνος (ix. 30, 1) and compare Arch. Zeit. 1876, p. 167.

In the following classification of the various types of Athene we would not be understood positively to endorse the identifications inserted in the text of coin-types with ancient works of art. But for the identifications there is, in each case, much to be said, and as we have not space to discuss them at length, we accept them provisionally in order to obtain a basis for arrangement. If any of them be hereafter disproved, it will not destroy the value of our work.

1. ATHENE PARTHENOS (l).

With these coins we may compare the following type on a Cilician coin of the fourth century B.C. which seems also a reproduction of the Athenian Parthenos.

Athene facing, holds in right hand Nike, left hand rests on shield, right elbow supported by trunk of tree.

Æ Auton. B. M. (Y xxiii.)

Bust of Athene in crested Athenian helmet, of which the ornamentation is obscure, but there seems to be an owl (?) on the neck-piece; wears necklace and aegis.

With these may be compared coins of Alexandria struck under Julia MammAEA.

Bust of Athene in three-crested Athenian helmet: on the top, sphinx, on the side a Pegasus or griffin, over the forehead heads of four horses.

Potin. B. M. (Y xxv.)

The literature which treats of the Parthenos statue of Pheidias and its reproductions in statuette relief and coin is so extensive that it is quite impossible here to summarise the results which it establishes. The coins add little to our knowledge; but on one or two points their testimony is important:

(1) the prop which on the Athenian statuette discovered in 1881 supported the right hand of Athene does not appear on the Athenian coins; but it does on a leaden tessera at Berlin, which bears the inscription AŒE and reproduces the Parthenos statue (v. Sallet, Zeit. f. Num. x. p. 152.) On the Cilician coin above cited, the stump of a tree is similarly introduced as a support. In our plates will be found several instances in which a prop appears to have been placed under the arm of a statue, see E lxxxvii., N xxiv., O ix., T vii., and more particularly the reproductions of the early statue of Artemis Laphria at Patrae on pl. Q, and the seated female figure, pl. EE xvi, xvii., who rests her hand on a column.

(2) The animal on the side of the helmet of Athene on late silver coins of Athens is generally quite clearly a Pegasus (as in xxiii.) but sometimes, though rarely, certainly a griffin. The coin of Imperial times (xxiv.) gives us a nobler, and in some respects truer, representation of the original, but the details cannot be made out. The coin of Alexandria (xxv.) adds the Sphinx as a support of the crest, and distinctly confirms the probability, established by coins and gems, that the visor of Athene's helmet was adorned with foreparts of four horses. Schreiber (Arch. Zeit. 1884, p. 196) remarks that owls are sometimes found on the coins in the place of the foreparts of horses; such coins are entirely unknown to us; the foreparts of horses are universal, and it can scarcely be doubted that they represent something which existed over the forehead of the Parthenos statue. A curious variant, however, occurs in the gold reliefs of St. Petersburg which give the head of the Parthenos (Athen. Mittheil. 1883, pl. xv., p. 291). In this case a sphinx supports the crest, flanked by Pegasus on each side; but over the forehead, in the place of the foreparts of horses, are foreparts of griffins and stags alternately.

2. ATHENE PROMACHOS (o).

Athene facing, head left, spear transversely in right hand, shield on left arm, aegis on breast.

Similar; before her, snake.

Æ Hunter, pl. x. 39.

On the whole Lange’s identification of this type as a reproduction of the Promachos of Phidias seems sound. He maintains that the turn of the head visible on the coin reproduces a turn of the statue’s head which was directed towards its right shoulder. He considers that the relief and statues published by von Sybel in the Athenian Mittheil. 1880, p. 102, also represent Athene Promachos.

3. THE ACROPOLIS.

The Acropolis-rock; on it to the left the Parthenon, to the right a staircase leading up to the Propylaea; between these, figure of Athene on basis; below, cave in which Pan seated to left.

Similar; Propylaea lower down, and type of Athene different.

Æ Vienna (Z VI.) Rhousopoulos.

Similar, right and left transposed.

Loebbecke (Z VII.)

III. IV. and V. of the plate represent roughly the Acropolis as seen from the north-west angle, in which aspect the marble staircase leading up to the Propylaea would appear on the extreme right, next, the Propylaea themselves, next, the bronze Athene, and next, the Parthenon; the Pancell being somewhat to the left of the staircase. The staircase is the principal feature of the view, this ἐργον τῆς ἄναβασεως was executed in the regained of Caius (C.I.A. iii. 1284–85). The coins are all of the age of the Antonines. When, however, we come to a consideration of details we find much want of exactness. The Propylaea are very inadequately represented, and the orientation of the Parthenon is incorrect. M. Beulé thinks that Pan is in the act of playing on the flute; but this is very doubtful.

But the most important point is the type and attitude of Athene. It is clear from the position of the statue that the intention of the die-cutter was to represent the bronze colossus of Pheidias which stood in the midst of the Acropolis, and we ought thus to gain some evidence as to the details of that colossus. But any such hope is destined to failure. On some of the coins such as Z IV., as Lange has already observed, the type represented is clearly that of the Parthenos. On others (as Z III.) she clearly holds Nike in her right hand, but her left seems to be raised. It is further a doubtful point whether the apparent differences between Z III. and Z IV. do not arise from mere oxidation.

4. ATHENE IN PEDIMENTS (k).

Athene running to right; in left shield and spear; right hand extended, beneath it olive entwined by snake; in front, owl.

Æ Loebbecke (Z IX.) Rhousopoulos.

Similar figure; no olive, but to left snake.

Æ Loebbecke (Z X.)

With these we may compare the following:—

Similar figure, plucking with right hand twig from olive; under olive, owl on pillar; to right, altar.

Similar figure, holding in right hand Nike.

Æ of Tarsus: Balbinus, &c.

R. Schneider (op. cit.) discusses the origin of this type which is widely copied in sculpture (e.g. Clarac. pl. 462A, No. 858a, a small statue of Pentelic marble in the Capitoline Museum) and in reliefs, as well as on coins and gems. By the aid of a puteal discovered at Madrid (engraved also in L. Mitchell’s History of Sculpture, p. 350) he traces the running figure of Athene back to the east pediment of the Parthenon, where the birth of the goddess is depicted. The resemblance of the coin-type to Athene on the puteal is very striking; but on the other hand we lack any satisfactory proof that the design on the puteal closely reproduces that of the pediment. Other writers, as Friederichs (Bausteine, 401) and Mr. Ernest Gardner (Journ. Hell. Stud. III. 252) have seen in the type reproduced in statues and coins of this group Athene from the west pediment. Certainly she is closely like the goddess in Carrey’s drawing of that pediment, only turned in the opposite direction. The attitude of the right hand is enigmatic. Mr. E. Gardner sees in it a gesture of triumph as the goddess points to the olive of her creation, but on the Roman medallion the goddess is distinctly plucking an olive-spray from the tree.

Thus it cannot be considered certain which of the pediments has furnished the prototype of this running Pallas; but it is not improbable that she may be traced to one or the other; her likeness to the extant figure called Iris in the eastern pediment strengthens the presumption.

A figure closely similar occurs in a round temple on a gem, in Wieseler, Denkmäler, II. 216c. This may be regarded as telling against the identification here proposed, but not with great force.

4. ATHENE AND POSEIDON (k and j).

Olive-tree entwined by snake, owl seated in the branches. To left of it Poseidon, in whose raised right hand trident pointed to the ground, and on whose left arm chlamys; at his feet dolphin. To right of it Athene, right hand advanced, in left shield and spear.

Similar, owl and dolphin wanting.

Æ Imb. (Z xvi.)

Æ Roman medallion of M. Aurelius.

Prov. Museum, Bonn (Z xv.)

cf. the relief published by Robert in the Athens Mittheilungen for 1882.

We have here two entirely distinct groups, each comprising Athene, Poseidon, and an olive-tree entwined by a snake. The first group (xi., xii., xiv., xvi.) is closely like the celebrated group on the vase of St. Petersburg published by Stephani (C.R. 1872) and repeated in this Journal (III. p. 245), where some account is given of the various interpretations to which the group has given rise. In the other group (xv. xvii.) Athene and Poseidon are not in conflict but at rest, and apparently engaged in colloquy. One is naturally tempted to bring the former group into connexion with the west pediment of the Parthenon, and to regard the latter group as connected with the anathema on the Acropolis mentioned by Pausanias in passage j. A noticeable point in the coins of the first group is that the snake is in all cases distinctly hostile to Poseidon.

5. ATHENE STANDING BY OLIVE.

Athene standing to left before olive-tree; in her right hand spear held transversely, in her left shield which rests on the ground.

B. M. (Z xix.) Owl perched in tree.

Loebbecke. Owl at foot of tree.

Beule, 390, 3. Owl in tree, snake at foot.

This Athene may perhaps be part of a group, which, when complete, would include Poseidon on the other side of the tree. On one specimen (Z xviii. B. M.) the snake which is twined round the tree seems to be looking at an enemy, who can scarcely be other than Poseidon. On the other hand the Athene of these coins is not exactly like the Athene of the groups above cited; more, however, like the goddess in the second than in the first group.

Paus. i. 27, 2.—Olive-tree in temple of Athene Polias:

Overbeck, Gr. Plastik. i. p. 209.
Wieseler, Denkmäler, No. 239b.

Athene to left, right hand advanced, at her feet serpent; before her Marsyas in an attitude of surprise.

Æ Bibl. Turin (Z xxii.)

This is an interesting group, and we find in it traces of sculptural origin, although Athene is not, as in the group described by Pausanias, striking Marsyas. Wieseler suggests (Nachrichten der k. Gesellsch. d. Wiss. Göttingen, 1885, p. 324) that the reading Μαρσάν ν παλοῦσα is corrupt, and that a better would be Μαρσάν ὁ νίλοντα αναπτόνουσα. Cf. however Michaelis, Paus. descr. arcis, p. 9, and Petersen, Arch. Zeit. 1880, who explains the phrase of the text.

Several writers whose opinions are summed up by Overbeck (Gr. Plastik. i. 209, and note 165) agree in regarding the Marsyas of the coin, which is like a marble statue in the Lateran and a bronze statuette in the British Museum, as copied from the Marsyas of Myron. The attitude of Athene is on the two coins different, and as they are too ill-preserved for us to judge of it in detail, we must content ourselves with saying that she is in a quiet attitude, indicating neither anger nor hostility. Pliny speaks of a group by Myron thus, (fecit) satyrum admirantem tibias et Minervam, which phrase applies far better to the group of the coin than the phrase of Pausanias; it thus appears not unlikely that we may have here a reproduction of the group of Myron, which may have been preserved at Athens.

We next reach a number of types of Athene which cannot be definitely traced back to a sculptural original: some are mere varieties of the types already described, some are new, and offer a field to investigation in future.

8. ATHENE NIKEPHOROS.

Athene standing to right; spear in raised right hand, Nike in left, himation round waist.

Æ Loebbecke (Z xxiii.)

Athene standing to right; in right hand Nike, in left spear; at her feet snake to right; behind her, owl on pillar.

Æ Naples (Cat. No. 7156) (AA i.)

The first coin under head 8 belongs to the class of figures of which the Pallas of Velletri is the most noteworthy specimen. Furtwängler in Roscher's Lexicon, p. 702 describes the class, which seems to have originated in the fourth century.

9. ATHENE HOLDING OWL.

Athene standing to right; owl in left hand, patera (?) in right; clad in long chiton.

Æ Imh. B. M. Loebbecke (AA ii.)

(Obv. Head of Zeus or Head of Artemis.)

Athene standing to left; owl in right hand, spear in raised left; himation over shoulders.

Æ B. M. (AA iii.)

Athene standing to right; owl in her right hand, in her left spear held transversely; coiled snake at her feet.

Æ Imh. Loebbecke. Rhousopoulos (AA iv.)
Hunter, pl. x. 33.
Athene standing to right; owl in right hand, spear in left hand, shield on left arm, himation over shoulders.

Æ B. M. (AA v.)

Athene standing to right; in raised right hand owl; behind her owl on pillar.

Æ Rhousopoulos. Loebbecke.

cf. Müller-Wieseler, Denkmäler, ii. No. 221, where the object in the hand of Pallas is identified as a pomegranate.

The first described of these types is the most important, and seems clearly to portray a sculptural original of the early period; there is in the pose something of archaic stiffness. Beulé suggests that it may portray the Athene Archegetis, of which the scholiast to Aristophanes (Aves, l. 515) says γιαῦκα εἴξεν ἐν τῇ χειρί. But this phrase is not distinctive, the owl being a usual attribute of Athene: we are equally likely to be right in considering the present type as Athene Paeonia. Athene Hygieia it cannot be, as that statue held a spear in the left hand: cf. Michaelis in Athenian Mittheil. i. 289.

10. ATHENE HOLDING PATERA.

Athene facing, head to left; patera in right hand, spear in left; shield on left arm.

Æ Loebbecke. Rhousopoulos (AA vl.)

Athene facing, head to left; in right holds patera over altar, in left spear; shield on left arm.

Æ Hunter, pl. xi. 4.

11. ATHENE STANDING, ARMED.

Athene standing to left, her raised right resting on spear, shield behind her; wears himation.

Æ Beulé, 390, 8. Imhoof (AA vii.)

Athene standing to right; holds in raised right hand spear, left rests on shield before her.

Æ Loebbecke (AA viii.)

Athene standing to right; holds in raised right hand spear, on left arm shield; snake at her feet.

12. ATHENE ARMED, RUNNING.

Athene running to right, looking back, right hand outstretched, in left shield and spear; drapery flying from her shoulder; before her, snake to right.
Athene running to right, right hand outstretched, on left arm shield; before her, snake to right.

The former of these two types is closely like the above-described figure of Athene from a pediment (Z viii.-x.), the only noteworthy difference being in the position of the right arm, which in the pediment type is extended backward, in the present type is stretched to grasp the edge of Athene's shield. This latter type is remarkably like Athene (or Enyo) on the coins of the Lucanians and Bruttians of the third century.

Athene moving to left, spear transversely in right hand, on left arm shield; before her, snake to left.

Athene fighting to right; in raised right hand thunderbolt, on left arm shield.

Athene fighting to right; in raised right hand spear, on left arm shield.

Similar figure; behind her, olive-tree entwined by snake; before her, owl.

Athene charging to right; in right hand spear outstretched, on left arm aegis.

At her feet snake, owl, or other symbol.

These types seem to represent successive stages in the development of the normal Athene Polias.

14. ATHENE HOLDING OLIVE-BRANCH.

Athene standing to left, holds in right olive-branch over coiled snake, on left arm shield.
This type closely resembles some of those ranged under Athene running. Compare especially AA xiii.

15. ATHENE VOTING.
Athene facing; left hand on hip, in right, vote which she drops into amphora; beside her, shield.
Æ Rhousopoulos.
This coin is very obscure in details; it may represent Athene Areia, of the Areiopagus, cf. Paus. i. 28, 5.

16. ATHENE SEATED.

18. ATHENE-NIKE. Cf. Paus. i. 22, 4. Temple of Nike Apteros.
Athene or Nike winged facing, clad in chiton and helmeted, holds in left hand a standard surmounted by an archaic Palladium.
Æ Copenhagen (AA xxiv.).
(Reverse, A Owl.)
This is a remarkable and unique drachm, assigned by M. Beulé in the Revue to the time of Conon. It was perhaps intended to circulate in Asia, and in fact was probably issued from an Asiatic mint. It cannot be said with certainty whether the representation should be called Athene or Nike: the helmet and the Palladium are in favour of the former attribution. We have no reason to think that it reproduces a statue; certainly not that of Athene Nike on the Acropolis.

Jahn has proposed the theory (N. Mem. dell' Inst. A. p. 24) that the more archaic Zeus (i.) on the coins is a copy of the archaic statue of Zeus Polieus (k), and the later Zeus of a similar type (iii.) is a copy of the statue by Leochares which stood beside it (j). On this theory Overbeck (K. M. p. 54) remarks that Jahn's identification of the archaic statue of Zeus Polieus though not certain is probable; and certainly its parallelism with the recognized type of Athene Polias (AA xiv.) is in favour of such identification. To Jahn's argument as to the statue by Leochares, Overbeck adds that the altar in front of the figure on the coin (III.) may stand for the altar which stood before Zeus Polieus, where was performed the annual ceremony of the Buphonia or Diipolia (Paus. i. 28, 11.)

The seated figure of Zeus (iv.) is very probably copied from the colossal statue set up by Hadrian in the Olympia (g) which would naturally be a copy of the chryselephantine statue by Pheidias at Olympia.

The archaic xoanon of Artemis at Brauron was a copy of the ancient xoanon carried off by the Persians to Susa and given by Seleucus (Paus. iii. 16, 7) to the people of Seleucia in Syria, on whose coins (N xi. xii.) we find copies of it, the present representation does not reproduce the Brauronian statue as Beulé supposed, being of another type. It is far more probably an Artemis Leucophryne. The statue dedicated by the sons of Themistocles would in all probability be modelled more or less closely on the cultus-statue of that deity in her temple at Magnesia in Ionia, where Themistocles was dynast. This cultus-statue is often reproduced on late coins of Magnesia; the goddess was represented in nearly the same form at Magnesia as at Ephesus, with polus on head, the body in term-like shape, pendent fillets hanging from the outstretched hands. The figure on our coin does not fully conform to this description; the feet are articulate, and in the outstretched hands are patera and bow; nevertheless the scheme seems rather Asiatic than European, and it seems not unlikely that the sons of Themistocles may have innovated in details on the fixed traditional type.

On Athenian coins, Artemis, when she bears one or two torches, is not easily to be distinguished from Demeter. The figure with short skirts is of course Artemis; as to the figure in long skirts we may hesitate: but on some coins, notably x, a quiver is distinctly visible, which can of course belong only to Artemis. When Artemis appears in company with Demeter (xvi.) Beulé (p. 325) calls her Propylaea, there being a temple of Artemis Propylaea at the sanctuary of Eleusis.

In the above list we have not attempted to distinguish types which represent Demeter from those which represent Cora. Nor is it possible to determine which of the types represent sculptural originals. Most of them are discussed by Overbeck (K. M. III 497); and we have not space for so long a discussion as would be necessary if we attempted to discriminate them properly.

There can be little doubt that the figure reproduced on these coins is, as Beulé has suggested, the Dionysus of Alcamenes. His likeness to the Pheidian Zeus is conspicuous in regard to his general attitude and the fashion of his outer garment, which does not cover the upper part of his body, but is brought over the left shoulder. There does not seem to have been a chiton under it. He is well adapted for a great cultus-statue, and that he served as such is proved by the table and altar of the coin iv. The head on the coin last described seems to be an exact enlargement of the head of the seated figure. It is certainly of noble type, but we may be somewhat surprised to find Alcamenes perpetuating so archaic a fashion of doing the hair.

Of these figures the first (CC vi.) seems undoubtedly a copy of an archaic statue, of about the time of Calamis. The figure holding a mask may be copied from one of the statues of Dionysus in the Theatre or its neighbourhood. The female figure in company with Dionysus should be Demeter rather than Artemis; the artistic type, however, would do for either.

It seems probable that this Theatre was chosen as a type for coins in consequence of the great improvements effected in it about the time of Hadrian, notably the erection of an elevated logeion. See C.I.A. iii. 239. Donaldson has called attention to the openings or niches which appear on the coin at the top of the cavea and at the foot of the Acropolis rock, and has cited in connexion with them the words of Pausanias, i. 21, 3, who says that at the top of the theatre is a cave in the rocks, wherein is a tripod, and in it Apollo and Artemis slaying the children of Niobe. In Michaelis' plan of the Acropolis a cave is indicated at the same spot, which was formerly blocked by the choragic monument of Thrasyllus (Descr. Arcis Athenarum, 1880.) On the Brit. Mus. coin (x.) there is an appearance of a monument over one of the caves, but this appearance is probably due to accident only.

The descriptions of Pausanias are not sufficiently exact to enable us to identify with certainty any of these figures of Apollo. But the early figure CC xv.-xvii. is connected by Furtwängler (Roscher's Lexicon, p. 456) with the so-called Omphalos Apollo of Athens and the Choiseul-Gouffier Apollo of the British Museum. T. Schreiber (Athen. Mittheil. 1884,
p. 248) maintains that it is probably a copy of the statue in the Daphnephoreion at Athens (Athenaeus, x. p. 424 F). That in which the hand rests on the head (xviii. xix.) seems from the description of a statue of Apollo Lyceius (above, g) in Lucian (Anacharsis, 7) to be meant for a copy of the statue in the Lyceum. The tripod and the laurel would very well represent such a locality as the Lyceum.

It is remarkable that the only sculptural records of Theseus mentioned by Pausanias are: his statue beside that of Herakles (a); his fight with the Minotaur (c); his lifting the stone (d); and his driving the bull of Marathon (e). The subjects of all these four representations appear on coins, but no other deed of Theseus, none of the exploits, for instance, which were depicted in the metopes of the so-called temple of Theseus. This is an interesting fact, and shows that many people at Athens were, like Pausanias, more impressed by separate groups than by those which merely formed part of the decoration of a temple. It is likely that one of the coins (DD i.) gives us the type of the statue of Theseus; and the group of Theseus raising the stone, as it appears again quite similarly treated on coins of Troezen (M xi.), is probably a copy of the bronze group on the Acropolis. As to the other types we cannot say whether they are original or copies; but the tameness with which the bull walks before the hero seems scarcely worthy of a sculptural group.

The identification of the group here presented has been attempted by many archaeologists, with varying results, which are above slightly indicated. The view usually accepted is that of Brunn, who sees in it a copy of the Eirene and Plutus of Cephisodotus, of which he supposes a sculptural copy to exist at Munich. Wieseler (D. A. K. ii. 99b) is disposed to find difficulties in this view. He remarks that the sceptre does not properly belong to Eirene [she does, however, hold it on late Roman coins], and further that the statue of Cephisodotus was in marble while the original of the Munich group was in bronze. He therefore prefers the attribution of Cora and the child Iacchus. Overbeck (Gr. Plastik. ii. 8) remarks that on the coin Eirene holds the end of the cornucopiae: this, however, does not seem to be the case in the specimens we have examined.

This group from the statues of Critius and Nesiotes has so often been discussed that it is unnecessary to say anything more about it. See Overbeck, Gr. Plastik, i. p. 118, and Michaelis in Journ. Hell. Stud. v. 146. The three coins of Mr. Loebbeke (xvi.-xviii.) seem to be unpublished, and the two first of them are decidedly of interest in point of style; the powerful forms of the heroes remind us of the Naples statues.

12.—Paus. I. 15, 1. Ἰούσι δὲ πρὸς τὴν στοὰν ἦν Ποικίλην ὀνομάζουσιν ἀπὸ τῶν γραφῶν, ἐστίν Έρμης χαλκοῦ καλούμενος Ἀγοράιος καὶ πύλη πλησιόν.

I. 22, 8. At entrance to Acropolis. Hermes Propylaeus.

I. 27, 1. Κέκριται δὲ ἐν τῷ ναῷ τῆς Πολιάδος Έρμης ξύλου, Κέκριται εἶναι λεγόμενον ἀνάθημα, ὕπὸ κλάδων μυρσίνης οὐ σύνοπτον.

Hermes as terminal figure, caduceus in left hand.

A.R Paris. (DD xix.)
Beulé 152.

Archaic Hermes bearded standing to right, holds caduceus in left hand.

A.R (DD xx.)
Beulé 348 (Beulé mistakes the caduceus for a wreath, and calls the figure the hero Stephaneophoros.)

Hermes running, chlamys flying, holds purse and caduceus.

A.E Loebbecke. (DD xxi.) Rhousopoulos.
Beulé 362, 1.

Hermes naked, standing, holds strigil and caduceus (?)

A.E Vienna. (DD xxii.) Loebbecke. (DD xxiii.)
Beulé 362.

The archaic figure of Hermes (xx.) may be a copy of the Hermes Agoraeus set up before the Persian wars. See Hermes, xxi. pp. 493, 600. The figure carrying a purse (xxi.) would seem to be a later Hermes Agoraeus. The third figure (xxii. xxiii.) we cannot positively identify; the strigil is clear and this seems to indicate Hermes if we compare the Hermes Promachus at Tanagra (X xiii.); but the caduceus is not certain; in fact the object looks more like a club. Perhaps the figure may be Theseus or Herakles.

13.—Paus. i. 18, 1. Τὸ δὲ ἰερὸν τῶν Διοσκοῦρων ἐστὶν ἄρχαῖον· αὐτὸι τε ἐστῶτες καὶ οἱ παῖδες καθήμενοι σφίσιν ἐφ' ἱππών.

i. 31, 1. The Dioscuri worshipped at Cephalae.

The Dioscuri, naked, their arms about one another, one holds patera, the other spear.

A.R (EE i.)
Beulé, 339.

This type of the Dioscuri seems to be a copy of an archaic work; they embrace one another like Dermys and Citylus on the Boeotian monument. Hegias an Athenian artist of early times made statues of the Dioscuri, which were afterwards carried to Rome. See Pliny, N.H. xxxiv. 78.

14.—Paus. i. 20, 3. Ἡν Ἀριστίων Ἀθηναίος, ὁ Μιθριδάτης πρεσβεύειν ἐσ τὰς πόλεις τὰς Ἑλληνίδας ἐχρήτο· οὗτος ἀνέτεισεν Ἀθηναίοις Μιθριδάτην θέσθαι Ρωμαίοις ἐπιπροσθεν.

Coins of Athens of the late type bearing the name of Aristion, and the name of Mithridates, as well as his badge, a star between two crescents.

15.—Paus. i. 21, 4. Τού δὲ Ἀσκληπιοῦ τὸ ίερὸν ἐς τε τὰ ἀγάλματα ἑστιν, ὀπόσα τοῦ θεοῦ πεποιηται καὶ τῶν παιδῶν, καὶ ἐς τὰς γραφὰς θεαὶ ἄγιοι.

1. 23, 4. θεδῶν ἀγάλματα ἑστιν Ἄμας τε, ἕν Ἀσκληπιοῦ παιδά εἰναι λέγουσι, καὶ Ἄθηνας επίκλησιν καὶ ταύτης Ἄμας.

16.—Paus. i. 18, 9. Hadrian builds a gymnasium at Athens.

Table surmounted by head of Athene wreath and owl; beneath it sometimes amphora, or in field, palm.

Similar; side of table inscribed ἈΔΡΙΑΝΕΙΑ.

The Berlin coin proves that this agonistic table has reference to games established by Hadrian.

17.—Paus. i. 22, 8. Charites by Socrates, at the entry to the Citadel.

Three female figures clad in long chitons, moving hand in hand; the foremost with outstretched hand.

This coin does not unfortunately help us in the interpretation of this much discussed group, which appears frequently on Athenian reliefs. Whether the figures represented are three nymphs, three Charites, or the three daughters of Cecrops remains uncertain.

18.—Paus. i. 23. Ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ νοτίου καλομένου τεῖχους, ὃς ἀκροπόλεως ἐστὶ θέατρον ἄστι τετραμμένον, ἐπὶ τούτων Μεδούσης τῆς Γοργόνος ἐπιλέχουσος ἀνάκειται κεφαλή, καὶ περὶ αὐτὴν αἰγίς πεποίηται.

A Gorgon-head also on the aegis of Athene, &c.

Head of Medusa.
Ar. Α. B. M. &c.
Beulé, 346.

19.—Paus. i. 28, 4. Pan venerated in grotto near Propylaea.

Pan seated in grotto on side of Acropolis-rock.
Æ. See Acropolis.

20.—Paus. i. 32, 4. Monument of Miltiades at Marathon, and a trophy of white marble.

Miltiades armed, dragging a captive Persian to a trophy.
Æ B. M. Imh. (EE viii.) Photiades. (EE viii.)

In the Theatre were statues of Miltiades and Themistocles; beside each, a Persian prisoner. (Schol. Aristid. iii. p. 535, Dind.).

21.—Paus. i. 33, 2. Μαραθῶνος δὲ σταδίους μᾶλιστα ἔξικοντα ἀπέχει Ραμνοῦς . . . μικρὸν δὲ ἀπὸ θαλάσσης ἀνοι Νεμέσεως ἐστὶν ἱερὸν . . . Φειδίας τὸν λίθον εἰργάσατο ἀγαλμα μὲν εἰναὶ Νεμέσεως, τῇ κεφαλῇ δὲ ἔπεστι τῆς θεοῦ στέφανος ἐλάφους ἔχων καὶ Νίκης ἀγάλματα οὐ μεγάλαται δὲ χερσίν ἔχει, τῇ μὲν κλάδον μηλέας, τῇ δὲ βίοτο πολύν.

Coin of Cyprus: fourth century B.C. Goddess facing, clad in long chiton, holds branch and patera.
Ar. B. M. Cypriote legend.
Six in Num. Chron. 1882, 89.

The identification of the figure on the coin with the Nemesis of Rhamnus, a work of Agoracritus, not of Pheidias, is advocated by M. Six, and has much in its favour. In the flourishing times of Athens coins of Cyprus and the neighbouring coast bear not unfrequently copies of the great statues of Athens.

22.—Other types at Athens:

Isis standing to left, lotus on head, holds flower.
Ar. B. M. (EE ix.)

Isis or Demeter facing, clad in long chiton and over-dress, holds ears of corn and long torch or sceptre: on head, head dress of Isis.

R Paris. (EE x.)
Beulé, 248.

Tyche facing, holds sceptre and cornucopieae.

R B. M. (EE xl.)
Nike standing to left, winged, holds cornucopieae (?) and drops lot into amphora.

R Vienna. (EE xii.)
Hero facing, naked, spear in raised right hand, left rests on side.

RAT B. M. (EE xiii.)
Metellus laureate seated facing, holds in right spear or sceptre, in left, sword across knees.

R de Hirsch (EE xiv.)
Similar figure, crowned by Nike who holds wreath and sceptre,

RAT B. M. (EE xv.)
Draped female figure seated to right on rock, rests left hand on a column.

RAT Berlin. (EE xvi.) Loebbeke. (EE xvii.)
Published by Beulé (p. 400) as a figure of Solon: Lange (Athen. Mittheil. vi. p. 69) is much nearer the mark in suggesting that it may be a Demeter; but even this attribution is uncertain.

ELEUSIS.

1.—Paus. i. 37, 2. Temple of Demeter and Cora on the sacred way.

i. 37, 6. Another in the pass to Eleusis.

i. 38, 6. Temple of Triptolemus at Eleusis.

i. 38, 7. The Sanctuary of the two Goddesses.

DEMETER seated in chariot of snakes, veiled, holds in right hand ears of corn.

Æ B. M. &c. (EE xix.)
Imhoof, M. G. pl. C, 28.

Triptolemus, standing in chariot of snakes, holds two ears of corn in right hand.

Æ B. M. &c.

Triptolemus seated in chariot of snakes, naked to waist: holds in right hand two ears of corn.

Æ B. M. &c. (EE xx.)
Overbeck, Demeter, pl. ix. 1 a and b.
Athen. Mittheil. iv. 250 and 262.
OROPUS.

1.—Paus. i. 34, 2. Καὶ Ὄρωπτιος ναὸς τέ ἐστιν Ἀμφιαράδου καὶ ἀγαλμα λευκοῦ λθον.

Æ Gallienus. B. M. (EE xviii.)

Head of Amphiaras bearded and laur.

Æ Auton. B. M.

Kochler in Athen. Mittheil. iv. 262.

On these coins Amphiaras is represented exactly in the guise of Asclepius, as a god rather than as a hero, in accordance with Pausanias’ statements.

SALAMIS.

1.—Paus. i. 36, 1. Ἐν Σαλαμίνι δὲ ... τρόπαιον ἐστηκεν ἀπὸ τῆς νίκης ἣν Θεμιστοκλῆς ὁ Νεοκλέους αἰτίος ἐγένετο γενέσθαι τοῖς Ἑλλησὶ ... ναυμαχοῦντων δὲ Ἀθηναίων πρὸς Μήδους δράκοντα ἐν ταῖς ναυσὶ λέγεται φανῆναι.

THEMISTOCLES in cuirass, helmeted, standing on galley, holds wreath and trophy; on ship, owl; before it, snake.

Æ B. M. Phocides. (EE xxii., xxiii.) Imh. Loebbecke.

Beulé, 305.

Owl and snake sometimes absent.

OTHER TYPE:

Demeter standing to left, holds in right hand ears of corn, in left, torch.

Æ Caracalla. Welzl de Wellenheim, Catalogue, No. 3965. (It is however doubtful whether this coin be not misread.)

Köhler, Athen. Mittheil. iv. 262.

SUPPLEMENT.

Since previous parts of the Commentary were published, several new types, or better specimens of types already published have been discovered, in most cases owing to the friendly cooperation of the custodians of the national collections at Berlin and Paris and to Prof. Rhousopoulos. These we subjoin, preserving the same order of subjects as in the earlier paper and the same numbers of sections where possible. In cases in which the passages of Pausanias have been already cited at length we here content ourselves with a mere reference.
8. Apollo facing, clad in citharoedic costume; holds branch and lyre.

This is a variety of A IX., and apparently a copy more or less free of a statue of Praxiteles. In this specimen the attitude of the god appears less stiff than in A IX., and the body rests more on one leg than the other. It is of course a great gain if we can trace a citharoedic type of Apollo to Praxiteles.

Artemis holding bow and drawing arrow from quiver; Apollo as above; Leto leaning on sceptre.

Æ Commodus. Rhousopoulos. (FF II.)

It is interesting to compare this type with A X. The figure of Apollo in it is more closely like the detached Apollo of A IX., and thus the probability that the group reproduces that of Praxiteles is increased. There is a correction to make in the description above under Megara, § 8: Artemis holds a bow, not as there stated, a plectrum.

9.—Athene standing erect, spear in raised right hand, shield on left arm.

Æ L. Verus. Rhousopoulos. (FF III.)

This is a better specimen than A XI.

Pagae.

1 A.—Isis standing in temple; holds sistrum and vase.

Æ Commodus. Rhousopoulos. (FF IV.)

Isis to right, and Asklepius, standing face to face.

2.—Horseman galloping right or left, chlamys flying.

Geta. Rhousopoulos.

Possibly this figure may represent Aegialeus, son of Adrastus, whose tomb was at Pagae, Paus. i. 44, 7; but more probably it stands for the Emperor.

Corinth.

3.—Athene Chalinitis taming Pegasus.

Athene here takes the place of the more usual Bellerophon.

Chimaera.

Æ Commodus. Rhousopoulos.

6.—Isthmus holding patera and rudder, seated in circular temple with conical roof surmounted by dolphins: on either side of temple, tree.

Æ Domna. Paris. (FF V.)
This coin seems to represent a different sacellum of Isthmus from that already figured (C xxxvii.). The form of the temple, and the pose of the statue within it, are quite different in the two cases.

10.—Poseidon naked, standing; right foot rests on a rock; trident in raised left hand; in right hand, which hangs down, a plustre (?) behind, tree.

Poseidon seated on throne, holds dolphin and trident transversely.

Æ Domitian. Berlin.

A variety of D liv.

Poseidon, holding dolphin and trident, in chariot drawn by four horses.

Æ Plautilla. B. M.

11.—Quadrangular harbour; at the top, temple, to which steps lead from the water, to left of it a shrine (?) to right a statue (?); at the two sides a range of colonnades: in the water, two Tritons, face to face.

Æ Caracalla. Rhousopoulos. (FF vi.)

As D lx. represents the harbour of Cenchreae, so the present coin seems to represent that of Lechaeum, which was a made harbour on the Corinthian gulf and the chief station of the Corinthian war-fleet. The temple in that case would be Poseidon’s (Paus. ii. 2, 3, ἐστὶ δὲ ἐν Λέχαιῳ μὲν Ποσειδόνος ἱερὸν καὶ ἀγάλμα χαλκοῦ).

Poseidon standing naked, holds dolphin and trident; before him Aphrodite, holding shield, with her back to him; between them, Eros.

Æ Commodus. Berlin.

13.—Aphrodite, facing, draped, holds in right hand apple, in left hand the end of her dress.

Æ Auton. Rhousopoulos. (FF vii.)

Obverse, Head of Laïs or Aphrodite. A different type of Aphrodite from D lxx. The figure may however be Tyche, as there is an attribute which looks like a cornucopiae.

Aphrodite, holding mirror, in a biga drawn by Tritons.

Æ Nero. Munich. (FF viii.)

Previously mentioned, but not figured.

19.—Zeus seated to left on throne, holds Nike and long sceptre.

Æ Hadrian. Rhousopoulos. (FF ix.)

M. Aurelius. B. M.
Probably a representation of the Capitolian Zeus; the throne has no back, otherwise the type is closely like that embodied by Pheidias in the Olympian Zeus (P xxI).

20.—PALLAS seated on throne; holds in right, Nike; in left, spear; against which rests shield.
Æ Sept. Severus. Rhou sopoulus. (FF x.)
Possibly Roma rather than Pallas.
Pallas standing, on basis: her right hand is extended, in her left spear.
Æ M. Aurelius. Loebbecke.
Plautilla. Rhou sopoulus (FF xi.)
The basis shows that we have here a copy of a statue: that it is of Pallas is not quite certain, the head not being clear on either specimen.

23.—HERAKLES facing, head turned to left; holds in right hand club which rests on a cippus, on left arm lion’s skin.
Æ Anton. Pius. Berlin (FF xii.)
A different type of Herakles from F ciii., civ.; but like them probably a copy of one of the numerous statues of Herakles which the city must have contained.
Herakles naked standing to left; right hand raised, in left, which is partly raised, club and lion’s skin; before him, Aphrodite holding shield.

24.—PEIRENE personified as a nymph, naked to waist, seated on throne; holds on her lap water-pot; behind, snake to left.
Æ Caracalla. Berlin.
Cf. F cvii., but in the present case Peirene is seated on a throne, a fact confirming the view that the coin-type is a copy of a figure by the spring.

APOLLO naked, standing, holds in right plectrum, in left lyre which rests on tripod; snake twined round tripod.
Æ Sept. Sev. Berlin (FF xiv.)
This figure of Apollo is connected by tripod snake and lyre with the oracular functions of the god, and therefore probably stands for Apollo Clarius. The oracle of Apollo at Clarus was celebrated and said to have been founded by Manto, daughter of Teiresias.
28.—Hermes naked, seated on rock, ram (?) beside him; the whole group on a basis, in front of which is a basin for water.

Æ Commodus. Paris (FF xv.)

This adds another to the representations on coins of Corinthian fountains: the figure of Hermes seems to be a copy of that in the sacellum, F cxxi; the figure of the ram, however, is not to be clearly made out in the present coin.

33.—Aphrodite, naked, but holding shield; kneeling at the feet of the Emperor.

Aphrodite, naked to waist, turned to right, supporting with both hands shield which rests on pillar: the whole in tetrastyle temple on rock.

Æ Hadrian. Rhousopoulos (FF xvi.)

This is a curious variety of G cxxi.—cxxxvi., inasmuch as Aphrodite is turning in the wrong direction, and her shield rests on a pillar which stands in the place occupied on other coins by Eros.

34.—Other Types at Corinth.

Military female figure (Achaia ?) seated on rock, holds spear and sword, looks backward; behind her, spears and shields.

Æ Plautilla. B. M.

This specimen serves to correct our description of G cxxi., in which we call the spears ears of corn.

Turreted female figure sacrificing left at altar; holds in left hand rudder.

This seems to be a form of Tyche.

Turreted female figure holding sceptre, standing beside trophy.

Æ Caracalla. Berlin.

An embodiment of the city of Corinth.

The Emperor, standing, in a tetrastyle temple.

Æ Nero. B. M. Rhousopoulos, &c.

Male figure standing; holds in right hand tessera; over left arm chlamys.

Æ Domitian. Rhousopoulos.

Perhaps an Athlete drawing lots for his turn in the Isthmian games.
Maenad clad in short chiton: holds in raised right hand torch or knife (?), in left human head.

Æ Caracalla. Rhousopoulos (FF xvii.)

TENEA.

Cf. Paus. ii. 5, 3.

TYPES.

Dionysus (?) standing to left; holds in right hand kantharos, in left thyrsus.

Æ Demna. Zeit. f. Num. i. 320, pl. ix. 3.

Tyche standing.

SICYON.

9. Asklepios seated on throne, sceptre in raised left hand, right hand extended over the head of a snake.

Cf. the statue at Epidaurus, L iii.—v.

OTHER TYPES at Sicyon.

14. Amazonian figure, clad in short chiton, on top of pillar; she extends her right hand, and holds in left spear.

Æ Caracalla. Paris (FF xviii.)

Either a statue of Artemis (cf. ii. 10, 2) or one of the numerous memorials of notable persons which existed at Sicyon.

(Isis to left; holds sistrum and vase.

Æ Geta. Rhousopoulos.

Horse ridden by human head.

Æ Geta. Rhousopoulos.

PHLIUS.

1.—Bearded male head crowned with reeds (Asopus?).

Æ Auton. B. M. Cat. Peloponnesus, pl. vii. 6.

3.—Artemis running to right, holds in left hand bow, with right hand draws arrow from quiver: dog at her feet.

Æ Geta. Berlin (FF xix.)

4a.—Paus. ii. 13, 7. Οὔ πόρρω δὲ ἔστιν ὁ καλούμενος ὄμφαλος.

Omphalos represented as a circle in the midst of a wheel.

Æ Auton. B. M. Cat. Peloponnesus, pl. vii. 4.

5a.—Paus. ii. 13, 7. "Εστὶ δὲ καὶ Ἀπόλλωνος, καὶ ἄλλο Ἰσίδος. τὸ μὲν δὴ ἄγαλμα τοῦ Διονύσου δῆλον πᾶσιν, ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ τὸ τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος.
APOLLO naked, standing to right; bow in advanced left hand.
Æ Geta. Rhousopoulos (FF xx.)
6.—APHRODITE (?) facing, right hand raised.
Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos.
It is impossible to determine whether this figure is of Aphrodite or some other goddess, owing to the bad preservation of the coin. It may be of Hebe.

CLEONAE.

OTHER TYPES:
Asklepios seated to left on throne, extends his right hand over head of coiled snake, in his left hand sceptre; dog lying behind him.
A close copy of the Epidaurian statue by Thrasymedes: cf. L III.—v.
Artemis to right, holds in left hand bow, with right hand draws arrow from quiver; dog at her feet.
Artemis facing, head turned to left, dog beside her; on either side a cypress.
Æ Sept. Severus. Brunswick (FF xxii.)

NEMEA. (Coins of Argos.)
2.—HYPSIPYLE running to left in alarm with arms spread towards erect serpent, which holds in its coils the body of Opheltes inverted.
Æ Hadrian. Berlin.

ARGOS.
8.—Perseus bearded (?) standing, chlamys over shoulders; holds in right hand harpa, in left Gorgoneion.
Æ Sept. Sev. Berlin (FF xxii.)
This type of Perseus is quite different from the conventional figure of I XVII., XVIII.
9.—APOLLO (Lycius ?) naked, facing, holds in right hand a branch; rests left elbow on Ionic column.
Æ M. Aurelius. Rhousopoulos.
L. Verus. Rhousopoulos (FF xxii.)
Above described, but not figured: possibly a reproduction of the work of the sculptor Attalus (Paus. II. 19, 3.)
16.—LETO, right hand raised to shoulder, the left extended over a small figure of Chloris, within a temple.
These important coins complete the proof that the group of these coins, as well as of $K$ xxxvi.—viii. is a copy of the work of Praxiteles. On these specimens there is nothing in the left hand of Leto, her right hand is raised to her shoulder, whether to a quiver or to adjust her dress. Chloris seems to be a somewhat stiffly-draped figure.

17.—Demeter standing, clad in long chiton; holds in extended right hand poppy-head, in left ears of corn.

Demeter, holding poppy-head and ears of corn, in a railed inclosure.

The pose of this figure is not unlike that of Demeter on $K$ xxxix. The inclosure in which she stands, probably the only occurrence of such a barrier on Greek coins, proves that the figure is a copy of a statue. The coin is too ill-preserved to be reproduced.

18.—One of the Dioscuri, naked, standing, holds spear and sword.

Æ Hadrian. Rhousopoulos.

19.—Two figures of Eileithúia to left, each holding two torches, one raised, one lowered.

Æ Hadrian, Paris.

21.—Athene standing, holds in right hand patera, in raised right spear, against which leans shield.

Æ Hadrian. Berlin (GG ii.)

24.—Asklepios seated on throne, in the front of a temple with five Ionic columns at side.

Æ Anton. Pius. Berlin (GG iii.)

We have here further proof that the statue of Asklepios by Xenophilus and Strato is that reproduced on the coins. The coin however on which the figure of Hygieia appears, $K$ XLVIII, is not of Argos, but of Aegium: see R x.

29.—Ares standing, armed, clad in short chiton, holds patera and spear.

Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos.

Compare L I.

30.—Other types at Argos.

Goddess standing, clad in long chiton; holds patera and sceptre.

Æ Sept. Severus. Rhousopoulos (GG iv.)

Goddess standing, clad in long chiton, holds pomegranate (?)
and sceptre; on either side of her, altar; behind her a second figure clad in long chiton, who raises her right hand and holds sceptre in left.

Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos (GG v.)

Standing figure, apparently male, holding long sceptre in round shrine on basis.

Æ Anton. Pius. Paris (GG vi.)

Artemis running, discharging arrow.

River-god reclining (Inachus ?).

Æ Ant. Pius. Rhousopoulos.

EPIDAURUS.

2.—The ASKLEPIOS of Thrasymeredes seated to left; before him, snake.

Æ Anton. Pius. Berlin (GG vii.)

Cf. L iii.—V. The present coin is added because of its remarkable execution and preservation. Even the head of Asklepios is quite distinct; it is closely like that of Zeus on fourth century coins.

3.—HYGIEIA standing in round temple.

Æ Anton. Pius. Berlin (GG viii.)

6.—OTHER TYPES at Epidaurus.

Female figure facing, in chiton and over-dress; holds in raised right long sceptre, in left a vessel (?).

AEGINA.

3.—Nude figure of APOLLO, right, in the act of discharging an arrow.

Æ Auton. Munich (GG ix.)

This is a different type of Apollo from L ii., but probably like it a copy of a work of art of the early Aeginetan school.

7.—ISIS; holds sistrum and vase.

Æ Geta. Rhousopoulos.

TROEZEN.

4.—APOLLO holding an arrow and leaning on a tripod, around which is twined a serpent; he is draped from the waist downwards.

Æ Sept. Severus. Paris (GG x.)
162 NUMISMATIC COMMENTARY ON PAUSANIAS.

5a.—Paus. ii. 31, 10. Καὶ Ἑρμῆς ἐνταῦθα ἐστὶ Πολύνιος καλούμενος; close to the statue, an olive.

Hermes facing, right hand raised, in left hand chlamys and caduceus; at his feet, on either side, ram and lyre.

Æ Sept. Severus. Paris (GG xi.)
Hermes advancing to right, drags goat by the horns, and holds in left hand caduceus.

Æ Sept. Severus. Paris (GG xii.)

7.—Hippolytus, standing, chlamys over shoulders, spear in raised left.
Æ Commodus. Rhouropoulos.

Hippolytus, with spear and sword, before Phaedra (or her nurse), who approaches him in an attitude of supplication.

Æ Sept. Severus. Berlin (GG xiii.)

9.—Asklepius standing at altar, snake-entwined staff in his left hand; all in temple.
Æ Commodus. Rhouropoulos (GG xiv.)

10.—Fountain, a pillar with lion sitting thereon, water flowing into basin from his mouth.
Æ Sept. Severus. Loebbecke (GG xv.)
A curious variant on the representation of the same subject on M x., where the water flows from between the lion's feet, and the basin is supported by a pillar, and not, as here, by legs.

12.—Other Types at Troezen.
Circular shrine, apparently surrounded by pillars: in the front of it, closed doors.
Æ Commodus. Berlin (GG xvi.)

Hermione.

1.—Poseidon naked, standing to right, holds trident and dolphin, left foot rests on rock.
Æ Caracalla. Berlin (GG xvi.)

3.—The drapery of Dionysus on M i. is peculiar, consisting of a skin or nebris reaching down to the knees: it may be that this is the black goat's skin from which at Hermione Dionysus took his name.

Lerna and Nauplia. Coins of Argos.

3.—Poseidon naked, standing, left foot propped on a rock; holds trident and dolphin.

Amymone seated on rock, her right hand raised to her neck,
LERNA AND NAUPLIA. 163

her left resting on hydria; before her Poseidon standing; holds trident in right, and carries chlamys over left arm.

Æ Ant. Pius. Rhousopoulos (GG xviii.)

This description cannot be relied on, as the prongs of Poseidon's trident, and the hydria of Amymone, the two details which identify the scene, are obscure. There is an uncertain object (sea-snake ?) above the left arm of Poseidon. Compare L liv.

Amymone seated on rock, hydria at her feet; right hand extended, left rests on rock.

Æ Paris (GG xix.)

Amymone standing, clad in long chiton; her right hand is raised to her neck, in her left she holds hydria.

Æ Antoninus Pius. Rhousopoulos (GG xx.)

There is a curious likeness between this type and L lv., the hydria on this coin appearing instead of the dolphin in the other. Probably in both cases the intention is to represent the nymph.

LACEDAEMON.

1.—ARTEMIS Astrateia facing, clad in short chiton with diplois; holds in right hand strung bow, in left spear and shield; beside her, stag.

Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos (GG xxii.)

This interesting coin entirely confirms our attribution and description of N III. as Artemis Astrateia.

GYTHEIUM.

1.—HERAKLES bearded in form of a term, clad in lion's skin, arm folded over breast.

Closely resembling V vi.

COLONIDES.

Niche or distyle TEMPLE, within which a female figure, indistinct.

Æ Geta. Rhousopoulos (GG xxii.)

ASINE.

OTHER TYPES at Asine.

Perseus facing, naked, holds in right hand harpa, in left head of Medusa.

Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos (GG xxiii.)

Coiled snake, on basis.

Plautilla. Inv.
Apparently a reproduction of some votive work of art. Terminal figure of Hermes, draped, right hand holds end of nebris, in left caduceus.

Draped female figure; holds what looks like a huge wreath or shield.

Pylæs.

1.—Pallas standing to right, clad in long chiton; holds in raised right spear, on left arm shield.

Æ Sept. Severus. Rhousopoulos (GG xxiv.)

Patrae.

Male figure standing on column in circular enclosure; he seems to wear military dress, or short chiton; his left hand is raised and rests on a spear or sceptre.

Æ J. Domna. Rhousopoulos.

A variety of R I.; probably a figure of an Emperor, from a market or gymnasium.
